Yeast and Fleischmann

When your average customer thinks of yeast, she recalls the name Fleischmann.

That's because these two names have been linked together for fifty years, and yeast bearing this name has established itself as clean, fresh, strong and dependable.

THE VALUE OF BRIGHT STORES

The difficulty of making a sale—whether it be dry goods or vegetables, jewelry or shoes is increased tenfold in a poorly lighted store. Other things being equal, the Electrically lighted shop will do more business than the store which uses other illuminants. "Indoor Daylight" can only be obtained by the use of Mazda Electric lamps.

How to Make Other Cocos as Good as Ours

Take the average cocoa on the market and carry it through another process or two, and you may have an article about as good as Croft's Swiss Milk Cocoa.

The trouble is that other manufacturers will not use that "other process or two," because of its cost. They prefer to send out their product half made, as it were—containing indigestible and ill-tasting ingredients which should have been eliminated—so they can save a little on the cost of making.

Croft's Swiss Milk Cocoa has everything taken out that should be taken out, and for that reason, among others, it has the smoothest, finest flavor of any cocoa made.

Will you mention the "Modern Merchant and Grocery World" when you write?

Government Tells What It Considers Immature Fruit Unfit for Flour Bleached With Potassium Peroxide. Falsely Labelled Electric Bleached. Definition of Self-Bleached Flour.

Special Correspondence of "Modern Merchant and Grocery World."

Washington, D. C.,

November 19, 1915.

The Bureau of Chemistry has received repeated requests to the terms "immaturity" and "maturity" as applied to interstate shipments of grapefruit and Florida oranges. Such a definition is desirable in view of the uncertainty now existing regarding the meaning of these terms.

With the information now available the Bureau of Chemistry considers grapefruit to be immature if the juice does not contain solids equal to, or in excess of, 8 parts to each part of acid contained in the juice, the acidity of the juice to be calculated as citric acid out water of crystallization. The bureau also considers Florida oranges to be immature if the juice does not contain soluble solids equal to, or in excess of, 8 parts to each part of acid contained in the juice, the acidity to be calculated as Grocers require an untiring means of delivery which cannot be supplied by horses.

Under the best conditions an Overland Delivery Car can do three times the work of a horse and wagon. In extreme weather the car's advantage is even greater.

Progress on wet and slippery streets make the going hard for the horses. The result is late deliveries.

Hoffman & Hayman, grocers of Cleveland, Ohio, write:

"Our Overland Delivery Car is over three years old now, and is doing our delivering over heavy roads in all kinds of weather, taking the place of three horses and wagons.

"Our repair bills have been very light. We are running sixty miles a day."

acid without water of crystallization.

Owing to the fact that the investigations of the bureau have not been completed, the ratios set for grapefruit and for Florida oranges are lower than those which are believed to be the lowest for properly matured fruit. It may therefore be expected that the requirements will be made more strict after data from several crops are available.

Investigations of the bureau disclose that there is being shipped in interstate commerce, labeled "electrically bleached," flour which has been bleached with nitrogen peroxide. Inasmuch as the bleaching agent is nitrogen peroxide, and not electricity, this form of labeling is regarded by the bureau as being false and misleading.

In Food Inspection Decision 100, the department announced its view that flour bleached with nitrogen peroxide is adulterated. At the time this decision was issued, the bureau was not informed that flour bleached with nitrogen peroxide was being labeled "electrically bleached." None of the proceedings which have been instituted against flour bleached with nitrogen peroxide involve charges that the flour is misbranded on account of the fact that it is labeled "electrically bleached." The bureau, however, gives notice that, irrespective of the question whether flour bleached with nitrogen peroxide is adulterated or misbranded in any of the particulars charged in the pending cases, it is of the opinion that flour bleached with nitrogen peroxide is misbranded if labeled "electrically bleached."

It is held by the bureau that the term "self-rising" applied to flour implies the presence of the usual leavening ingredients and that an additional statement of their presence is unnecessary.

According to Circular 19, the unqualified term "flour" should be applied only to the fine, clean, sound product obtained by bolting wheat meal. It is not required, however, that the particular grade of flour or wheat used be specified. If any statement regarding the grade be made on the label, it must, of course, be correct.

Products prepared by mixing flours of different materials may not be named after a single constituent.

Why a Manufacturer Should Be Permitted to Fix the Retail Price of His Product

Views of Various Believers in This Doctrine Who Offer Them as Arguments for the Pending Stevens Bill.

[The "Modern Merchant and Grocery World" has obtained and will from time to time present a series of statements by various well-known persons who believe that the manufacturer should have the right to tell the retailer what price he must get for the manufacturer's product. All of the views which will be presented can be taken as arguments for the pending Stevens Bill, which seeks to give a manufacturer that right.—ED.]

No. 8.—By C. F. Nixon, Retail Druggist, Leominster, Mass.

I want to cite one instance in a single city of the methods that were employed by chain stores who thrive on the cut prices which the Stevens bill would prevent. In the city of Lowell, Mass., the Riker-Hegeman people went in and found a store that had been long established; father and son had probably been in business for 50 or 60 years, and the son is older. He had the largest drug business in Lowell. The Riker-Jaynes people went to the owner of the building and leased the drug store from under him. The owner of the building did not give his old customer an opportunity to meet the advance in rent, and he was obliged to move out of the building on a month's notice onto a side street. His business was practically ruined. They go to another man down another street. In this particular case it was the United Cigar Co., where the rent was comparatively small, and they offered to double the rent and drive this man out of business. They did not succeed in driving this man out of business, but the man pays twice as much rent as before. If they can not get a man's position they will bankrupt him by his rents.

Over in Cambridge, I might say incidentally, I know of another case where a man's rent was raised from $7,000 to $12,000 a year by these same means.

Here is one more instance from Lawrence, Mass., and the gentlemen who wrote this letter has been suffering from the unfair competition of this retail drug trust which uses the weapon of price cutting on proprietary goods, together with the secret rebate, as well as the unfair practices recited by them:—

Lawrence, Mass., Feb. 4, 1914.
Mr. Nixon, Leominster, Mass.

Dear Sir:—At the request of Mr. Campbell, of Lowell, Mass., to furnish you with some facts in regard to the mode of conducting drug business, as carried out by the chain stores, I will submit the following:

When they first opened up they sold cigars at retail for less than we could buy at wholesale, also patent medicines and articles that the public knew the price of. Every week they inaugurated sales, and we found that on the articles such as rubber goods, where no regular stamp was on the article, that their price was a great deal higher than ours, but on rubber goods that the retail price was printed on they would sell at cost or below cost to us, and in their ads. they would mention the fact that no goods would be sold to retail druggists.

Many of the druggists would send their friends to purchase the articles for them, when they could buy for less than the wholesaler would charge. Now that they have established a trade and have got the people coming, we have noticed that they are getting prices on many articles better than us.

You are no doubt familiar with the 1-cent sale, where they charge 25 cents for a patent medicine and for 1 cent they will sell you another bottle, or, in other words, for 26 cents you can purchase two of a 25-cent article. We can not meet their prices. We have tried to purchase from wholesale dealers the articles they advertise, but the wholesalers tell us that they can not buy articles in many cases from the manufacturers at the prices the chain stores retail them for.

I personally have arrived at the conclusion that, they being large distributors, are favored by the manufacturers by receiving larger discounts than the wholesalers are allowed.

You are no doubt aware of their methods of leasing out drug stores to get rid of a competitor, as per their action in Haverhill in leasing out Mr. Norton, and subletting the store for a meat market.

Trusting the few pointers I have given you may be of some help, and wishing you every success in your fight against chain stores, I remain,

Very respectfully yours,

JOHN J. FORREST.

What did they do in Lowell? They came into Lowell and advertised cut prices. The ordinary wholesale prices of proprietary goods as they come into the drug store are practically the same as the same priced goods in other trades. They are from $8 to $9 per dozen. That is the average price in a hardware store, dry goods store, etc. It costs 25 to 30 per cent. in any retail business to do business. These goods cost $8 to $9 per dozen. They advertise them at 49 cents and 59 cents all over the country, not in the city of Lowell alone, but within a radius of 10 miles to bring people to that store. Now the people are impressed with the belief that if these people are selling goods for 49 cents that they have formerly paid 90 cents or more for, that the old dealers have, in popular terms, been roasting the people. They do not believe for one moment that these stores are selling goods at cost or below cost. They do not know the fact. The Riker-Hegeman people and all these kind of people are simply using that as bait. The chain drug stores mark up proprietary articles that are advertised at cut rates with articles of their own make, on which they make a big profit, and for which they get the full price.

We had a cut-rate war in my own town one time on this patent medicine proposition. A grocer put out patent medicines, using them as bait for drawing business into his grocery store. One of my drug friends and myself said we would try to meet this, so we undertook to sell groceries at cost, or at a very small profit. We first advertised teas and coffees. Teas that had sold for 70 cents we bought at 48 cents. We advertised these all over town at 48 cents; we were making 2 cents a pound. We sold a lot of that tea, but that did not accomplish our purpose, because there are many kinds of tea; nobody knows the price of tea, and very few people know the quality of tea. I continued this for a while. I said to my druggist friend, "The only way to beat this man is to sell sugar." Sugar is on a par, I might say, with patent medicines. There is pretty nearly a fixed price on sugar. People have an idea there is not very much margin in profit on sugar, but we sold sugar at cost and by selling sugar stopped the cutting of our goods. We sold ons of sugar in two drug stores hort time. We could not ac-ish much with the tea. I that answers your question on etary medicine. On other it cnts no figure at all. You not do it with Epsom salts, or rhubarb, or anything of that kind, because it has no advertised price as do proprietary articles.

My idea is that all this cut-price business would be stopped by a law allowing a manufacturer to fix an arbitrary price.

le argument of this retailer, in shell, amounts to this: that he ifferent to advertised brands as a class because they all pay about the same profit. Therefore it makes no difference to him which one of them sells. If, he argues, some manufacturer of an advertised brand will give the retailer more profit than the others are paying, then he will get behind that brand and push it.

The trouble with that argument is that while he might keep the extra profit which the manufacturer gave him, his competitor would not but would cut the price. Mr.
Schreiber would have to follow him and the brand which he was to exploit would at once cease to be any more profitable than the others.

The great difficulty which manufacturers of advertised brands have is to induce retailers to keep their profits in their own pockets.

WITH THE EDITOR

In my judgment the trade of Pennsylvania will be glad to note that James Foust has been appointed Dairy and Food Commissioner again. Mr. Foust has held the office longer than any other incumbent, and has given general satisfaction. So far as I know, he has but one enemy in the entire State—the unspeakable Philadelphia “North American,” which is malicious and vindictive because Foust broke up the graft between that paper and H. P. Cassidy, former Philadelphia agent.

Mr. Foust is a courteous and careful Food Commissioner. He does his best to be fair in everything and if there is a doubt, he is more apt than not to give the benefit of it to an accused dealer, on the ground that an unfounded accusation against a food dealer may do him as much harm as a true one.

A grocer, when he contrasts his own lot with that of a druggist, is apt to think of prescriptions costing 3 cents and selling for 75, and various other products, including patent medicines, selling at profits that to the grocer look like wealth indeed. And yet read the following from the esteemed “National Druggist”:—

There is no class of men who receive so meager a return in proportion to the value of the service they render to society as pharmacists. Not to speak of the many accommodations and conveniences the furnish free, they are compelled, in most cases, from circumstances they are unable to control, to sell proprietary articles, which constitute about half their total sales at prices but slightly in advance of, and in some instances, at less than, actual cost. But this is not all. Even in making charges for prescription work, so intense is competition, that little account is taken of the fact that they are furnishing professional skill as well as drugs and that, hence, they are entitled to something more than a merchandise profit on the same. Under these conditions, it is no wonder that there are so many pharmacists who only make a fair living, and that there are some who even do not do that.

I have no intention of entering into any discussion about this—I know nothing about it. I merely observe that druggists do not need to sell patent medicines at all. Confessedly it does not pay them to, and if they would throw them all out, everybody would be better off. Particularly the druggist himself, for he would undoubtedly be making more prescription work.

There seems to be a very large number of people in the world who would rather steal the results of others' work than do any work themselves. This is very unfortunate. Of course it is dishonest, but even more, it is so low-down mean. I consider stealing a trade-mark or a patent much worse than stealing money, for the money is only stolen once.

I have looked with great curiosity and interest over a book sent me by counsel for the National Biscuit Co., entitled “Trade Mark Law Suits.” The National Biscuit Co. has many trade names and it has been in court a very great deal defending them. The book is a record of these occasions, and it certainly opens one's eyes as to the meanness of some humans. In 1905 the National Biscuit Co. had to proceed against 268 concerns for stealing its trade-marks; in 1906, against 362; in 1907, against 430; in 1908, against 504; in 1909, 546; in 1910, 598; in 1911, 644; in 1912, 676; in 1913, 706, and in 1914, 882. Thus the number has steadily increased, and last year was nearly four times what it was ten years ago. Of the 882 in 1914, all but 49 stopped their thefts the minute the National Biscuit Co. told them if they didn't, it would sue. Forty-nine persisted and injunctions were granted against every one.

It is inconceivable that even one of these infringements could be accidental. The National Biscuit Co.'s trade names are so well known that probably every one of these 882 concerns deliberately set about copying them. To look over the colored pages of this book, on which appear fac-similes of infringing labels, side by side with the National Biscuit Co.'s own, is to see the artist at work with a National Biscuit Co. package as a model, under an instruction, “Get just as close to it as you can and be safe.”

It is a sad, sad commentary on the dark streaks in human nature when a single firm finds nearly nine hundred men in a year who would rather steal from it than to work.

When the decision in the Cream of Wheat case was handed down, affirming the right of the Cream of Wheat Co. to refuse to sell to the Great Atlantic and Pacific Tea Co., I said that there was nothing new in this, for it had always been the law that a private seller could choose his own customers. The American Fair Trade League differed with me very radically, and said the decision was new law—the first note in the emancipation of the trade from reckless cutters.

The Tea Co. appealed the case to the New York Court of Appeals, which last week affirmed the lower court and reaffirmed the right of the Cream of Wheat Co. to sell to those to whom it wished to sell. Its decision the Court of Appeals said something which I am gratified to note entirely confirmed a statement that the above had always been the law:—

We had supposed that it was elementary law that a trader could buy from whom he pleased and sell to whom he pleased, and that his selection of seller and buyer was wholly his own concern. It is part of a man's civil rights that he be at liberty to refuse business relations with any persons whomsoever, whether the refusal rests upon reason or is the result of whim, caprice, prejudice or malice.

Before the Sherman Act it was the law that a trader might reject the offer of a proposing buyer, for any reason that appealed to him; might be because he did not like the other's business methods or because he had some personal difference with him politically, racial or social. That was purely his own affair with which nobody else had any concern. Neither the Sherman Act nor any decision of the Supreme Court considering the same, nor the Clayton Act has changed the law on this particular. We have not yet reached the stage where the selection of a trader's customers is made for him by the Government.

The American Fair Trade League may now be expected to issue a statement that I tampered with the court.

One cannot but pity the poor Adams Express Co. Once again, so arrogant and arbitrary to the last degree, charging excessive rates; often charging them at both ends, having little or no capital invested yet earning enormous dividends not out of its service but out of extortions—now with its business lost to parcels post, its rates cut by the Interstate Commerce Commission, it is reduced to going out soliciting orders for apples and potatoes! What a humiliating position for the one-time autocrat.

Your success depends largely on what other people think of you and your business methods. Look at yourself and your business as the public does.

A clean sidewalk is sure to impress the passerby and draw his attention to the windows.

Keep them clean inside and out. Change displays often. Many times customers for a particular article will notice some other article in your window and buy it. Use neat, attractive signs in your windows, calling attention to particular bargains.

Selling Talks With Clerks

BY A MAN WHO HAS BEEN ONE

Conducted by W. E. SWEENEY, Manager for L. Lehman & Co.'s Department Food Store, Dover, N. J.

Matter of Canned Plums.—Ten egg plums are cheap. Extra standard quality, if bought right, can be sold for 15 cents—No. 2½ cans California fruit. But plums are not what can list as a popular seller so, as Messrs Ott told us in a wonderfully interesting lecture the other night, there is always a way out." The "way out" in the plum proposition is to open a jar, turn the contents into a quart jar, label it and talk it to every customer who approaches your counter.

Every minute you get a thing like this in a glass jar your sales talk is helped a great percent. It clinches arguments, being it demonstrates. It shows the value of the plums so that you don't have to guess at their being "as large as an egg."

This method is so practical and so simple that you would think it would be used by all good grocerymen, yet it is only once in a great while the writer meets it while nosing around for "copy." When you pick up this jar of plums and tell about the sweetness of the syrup, the new pack of the fruit itself, and above all—the price, the sale is made.

You will enjoy it, too, because we all like results. We like to see effort count for something.

On Being Neutral.—Whether your sympathy is with the Germans or with the allies, the proper thing to do in business is to keep a respectful neutrality of speech. You may say we live in a free country and have a right to express our opinion.

Sure you have—in the proper sphere.

Back of that counter you represent a firm that accepts U. S. money from all classes, all creeds, all nationalities. They deal at your store because you have received them politely and served them attentively.

They're your friends. Is it wise to break this bond of business friendship unnecessarily?

Is it wise to assail the Government under whose protection they were born, and the people there, of whom many are still dear to their heart?

No sir, it is not.

In so far as it has worked out so superbly at the White House, just in proportion will it apply in your case and mine.

Pennsylvania Organization Notes.

Organizer Smedley addressed the meeting of the Indiana Chamber of Commerce on November 9th at the City Hall. There was a good attendance. In the absence of the president, Vice-President Sloan presided. Following

Mr. Smedley's address there were short talks by the merchants present, after which refreshments were served. At the next meeting the ladies are to be invited and a reception will be tendered the clerks of the city and an effort made to start a movement looking to greater co-operation between these important factors in mercantile life. The Indiana Association is a prosperous organization.

The Latrobe Association held a special meeting on November 10th, at which the Organizer was present and made an address. The attendance was good and considerable interest manifested. The Latrobe Association has a Organizer Smedley visited the association of Armstrong County at Kittanning on November 11th. The occasion was a banquet held at the City Hall and attended by a large number of representative business men. Prior to the banquet the regular meeting of the association was held. After the elaborate meal had been enjoyed, President Morgan, of the Pittsburgh & Shawmut Railroad Co., was introduced as toastmaster. Organizer Smedley talked on "Community Development;" Hon. J. Frank Groff spoke on "The Need of the Day;" J. R. Einstein discussed "Credits;" Hon. J. Dougherty gave his views on "Business and Burgess;" Jno. M. Rorer on "Town Affairs." Plans were made for an enlargement of the scope of the organization. Kittanning is a good town, with live business men, and it has a good organization. President McClister and Secretary Copley are the right men in the right place. It will grow because the men behind the officers will make it grow.

The Johnstown Merchants' Credit Bureau entertained the Commissioners appointed by the Governor to administer the Workmen's Compensation Act and State Insurance Fund on November 15th with a banquet at the Hotel Fort Stanwix. Over 400 were present. Delegations of merchants were present from Pittsburgh and other cities and towns. Editor Anderson acted as toastmaster. It was a big event.

Johnstown will hold a food show in February. Plans are ready and space is being rapidly engaged.

Pittsburgh will hold a food show late in February. It will be a big affair and is under the auspices of the association.

The Organizer has arranged to visit Hazelton, Bethlehem, Pittston, Bellwood, Altoona, Erie, Titusville, Milton, Danville, Scranton, Butler, New Brighton and Connellsville. If you want his services write to 802 Chestnut street, Philadelphia.

Who Knows the Atlantic Stamping Company?

To the Editor.

Dear Sir:—Do you know anything about the Atlantic Stamping Co. of Rochester, N. Y.?

Their Mr. Frank Pierson, vice-president, was here October 13th and wanted me to take stock in their company—$100 a share, 7 per cent. cumulative preferred (non-assessable)—and in doing this they would allow us an extra discount of 10 per cent. on all goods purchased of them.

He said the stock was limited to three shares.

About ten days after he was here we had a letter from James T. Niland, of Rochester, N. Y., offering us ten shares of same stock for $75 a share.

What would you advise, and do you think it a good investment? Let us hear from you as soon as possible.

Very truly,
C. S. LAFFERTY & SON.

We have advised this correspondent to let this scheme alone. The "Atlantic Stamping Co." has no rating, and we have not been able to learn anything about it. The single fact that somebody has already cut the price of its stock—very possibly the company itself—is in itself suspicious.

An extra discount of 10 per cent. on goods that you might not want at all wouldn't mean much of a return on your investment.

Dear Sir:—Is it safe to carry insurance in the non-board companies?

We thought you said the Adams Express Co. discontinued soliciting grocery and food product business from the consumer. We know of an individual, who is no employee of theirs, who gets a circular three or four times weekly. We are enclosing one of their lists.

Do you advise the 80 per cent. reduced rate clause, and what conditions must be met?

Respectfully yours,
KLECKNER & Co.

1.—We are a little in doubt as to what you mean by "non-board" insurance companies. If you mean mutual companies—although they have Boards of Control—it is undoubtedly perfectly safe.

2.—We did not say that the Adams Co. had stopped soliciting, but that it had stopped soliciting for Larkin goods. It is still trying to work up a food business between producers and consumers. The Adams advertisement you send is reproduced in another column.

3.—We advise not accepting an insurance policy with the 80 per cent. clause in it. Full insurance is best. Be sure that you find the 80 per cent. clause, however; it is very cleverly worded and may escape you.

There is no other Salad Oil as good as this

¶ There are several "salad" oils on the market, under various names. Practically all are wholly or largely cottonseed oil, a wholesome, nutritious, and thoroughly good food product.

¶ But there is as much variation in the quality of vegetable salad oils as there is in the quality of olive oil. All are pure enough, but in flavor and general desirability there is a wide difference.

¶ Goldenoyle, the new cooking and salad oil which we are just now bringing out, is the most superfine grade of oil we have ever seen.

¶ Prof. L. B. Allyn, the chemist of the Westfield, Mass., Board of Health, said after analyzing it, that it "has the same food value as olive oil, and weight for weight surpasses animal fats generally."

¶ Any retailer will do well to be the first to introduce Goldenoyle to his town. It is bound to please. The packing is fine and the retailer's profit good.

¶ When we say Goldenoyle is the finest oil of the kind we ever saw, we are giving you an experience of over a quarter of a century.

News From the Anti-Premium Campaign. Western Railroad Congestion Delays Freights. State Department Tells Trade How to Sell Storage Eggs. Too High Prices for Norwegian Fish Balls. Market Summary.

New York, Nov. 19, 1915.

At a meeting of the National Premium Advertising Association, held during the week, Edw. F. Spitz, General Counsel, reviewed the attack which has been made upon premiums during the last year. He said that enemies of premiums had had antagonistic bills introduced in the Legislatures of sixteen States, but did not pass in a single one with the exception of Oregon, which passed a bill taxing the gross receipts of any concern using premium advertising 5 per cent. This act, it will be remembered, was recently declared unconstitutional. Indiana, Utah and Alabama passed laws taxing heavily all concerns supplying and redeeming trading stamps. The Indiana and Utah laws were declared unconstitutional. The Alabama law, which imposes a tax of $1,000 on such companies, does not take effect until 1916. In West Virginia a trading stamp business consisting of sending trading stamps from New York into West Virginia by mail was held to be interstate commerce, and the court said that no State could fix a tax upon it. The Florida anti-premium law of 1913 was repealed during the past year. This act taxed all merchants using premium advertising $750.

It appears from Mr. Spitz's address that the constitutionality of the law of the State of Washington, imposing a prohibitive tax upon trading stamps, was heard by the United States Supreme Court on November 1st, but of course no decision has been handed down, or will be handed down, for some time.

The campaign by the State Department of Foods and Markets to compel sellers of cold storage goods to label them as such and not to sell them as fresh is proceeding with good results. The Commissioner, Mr. Dillon, claims that the trade generally, or at least the better part of it, are in favor of the campaign. About half a dozen cases of violation of the order have been reported to the Department during the week, but there will be no prosecutions in any of them, as all of the dealers complained against immediately expressed their willingness to turn over a new leaf.

The order issued to retailers is as follows:—

Every person, firm or corporation who offers for sale at retail eggs that have been kept in cold storage or refrigeration is hereby required to display in a conspicuous place in his place of business, in view of the public, a card upon which shall be printed "Cold Storage Eggs Sold Here" in letters not less than two inches in height, and to issue with each sale of cold storage eggs a bill or invoice plainly marked "Cold Storage Eggs." Retailers displaying or holding cold storage eggs must post a sign in full view of the public, in or near the container, containing the words "Cold Storage Eggs" and the price plainly marked for which they are sold.

The following is the order issued to jobbers:—

Every person, firm or corporation who does a wholesale or jobbing trade in cold storage eggs, or who offers cold storage eggs for sale, is hereby required to mark all cartons and all cases, containing eggs in cartons or otherwise, with the words "Cold Storage Eggs" in a conspicuous place on the outside of the carton and case, and to plainly mark on the face of all the invoices and bills the words "Cold Storage Eggs" in billing or invoicing for the sale of eggs that have been kept in cold storage or refrigeration; and also to display in a conspicuous place in his place of business, in view of the public, a card upon which shall be printed "Cold Storage Eggs Sold Here," in letters at least two inches in height.

Commissioner Dillon is taking an interest in the price at which storage eggs are sold in this city and said last week that the present wholesale price is such that no retailer is justified in charging more than 30 cents for storage eggs at retail.

Mr. V. C. Pinkham, secretary of the National Retail Dry Goods Association, is out with another statement opposing the Stevens Bill. He said that he and his representatives questioned 550 retailers as to their attitude on the Stevens Bill and 94 per cent. expressed opposition to it. One hundred and fifty manufacturers were also asked and of these 80 per cent. were against the bill, which, as recently explained, is now pending in Congress and would give manufacturers the right to fix the retail price of their product.

The bulletin of the Norwegian Chamber of Commerce, which is issued from an office in this city contained an interesting little item about Norwegian fish balls. The bulletin states as follows:—

When the Norwegian packers advanced their prices on fish balls so very materially, it naturally invited American competition, and there is on the market to-day, Norwegian Style American made fish balls. Once started, the packing of fish balls may naturally assume larger proportions, and other firms will try to compete, and also pack fish balls. This will mean a very serious competition to the Norwegian canners. They are now awake to the fact that while the advance in the price of an article may mean a temporary profit, it surely invites outside competition, and ultimate loss of trade. It would be well if Norwegian packers would take this into careful consideration.

This Is the Decision in the Cream of Wheat Appeal Case

Court Says Cream of Wheat Company Can Refuse to Sell Great Atlantic & Pacific Tea Company Without Any Reason Whatever. Concern Has No Monopoly and Can Absolutely Choose Its Own Customers.

By request we publish the greater part of the text of the decision of the New York Court of Appeals, in the Cream of Wheat case, affirming the ruling of the lower court that the Cream of Wheat Co. could legally refuse to sell the Great Atlantic and Pacific Tea Co. with a reason or without one:—

In the production of wheat flour from wheat there is a sort of by-product, known as "purified middlings." It is produced by every flouring mill in the United States engaged in the manufacture of wheat flour; it is a staple commodity regularly quoted and dealt in in all grain markets. The Cream of Wheat Co. buys "purified middlings," selecting such as it thinks grade high in quality. Without submitting them to any process or treatment, without adding anything to them, it puts up the middlings which it selects in packages and offers its selection to the trade under the name "Cream of Wheat." That name identifies packages containing middlings of defendant's selection and it has protected its trade name for such selection by a copyright covering the carton in which the cereal is packed. Either because it has used good judgment in its selections, or because it has well-advertised its trade-mark, it finds a ready market for its packages. Its particular selection, however, amounts to less than 1 per cent. of the total purified middlings bought and sold in this country.

With an exception which will be referred to later, the Cream of Wheat Co. makes no sales to consumers or to retailers, but confines its sales exclusively to wholesalers, to whom it charges two prices, $3.95 per case in carload lots and $4.10 per case in less than carload lots. To each purchaser from it it sends a circular requesting such purchaser to sell to the retail trade only at a price of $4.50 per case, adding to this request the statement that it does not intend to waive the right to refuse at any time to supply any dealer who shall fail to comply with any request made by it, the infringement of which defendant may deem prejudicial to the interests of the consumer, to defendant's own business or to the trade at large. The tea company contends that defendant's course is a violation of the Sherman anti-trust act, and that under the recent Clayton act his suit may be instituted and maintained.

That branch of the case has been most elaborately argued. It was discussed by the district judge. We do not find it necessary to go into it, as we are satisfied that complainant is not entitled to the relief now asked for.

As was stated before, the Cream of Wheat Co. has elected not to sell to consumers or retailers, but to confine its sales exclusively to wholesalers. There is nothing unusual about such a course of business, and certainly it is no offense against common law, statutes, public policy or good morals for a trader to confine his sales to persons who will buy from him in large quantities. A "wholesaler" is one who buys in comparatively large quantities and who sells, usually in smaller quantities, but never to the ultimate consumer of an individual unit. He sells either to a "jobber" (a sort of middleman) or to a "retailer," the latter being the one who sells to the consumer. The "large" quantities bought by the wholesaler may vary greatly—from a fraction of a carload to many carloads; the character, not of his buying but of his selling marks him as a wholesaler. If occasionally, in some particular business, this term loses somewhat of its original significance; such manifestly, as the record shows, is not the fact with the business now under consideration.

Upon the proofs and the admissions in the record the tea company is not a wholesaler, but a retailer; it does not confine its sales to retailers, but sells to countless consumers; a package at a time for 12 cents.

The Cream of Wheat Co., as we have seen, in the conduct of its business decided and made announcement to the trade that, for reasons sufficient to itself, it would sell only to wholesalers. Why if it chose to do so it could not make such a rule and adhere to it, we are at a loss to understand. It named the prices at which it would sell to wholesalers, so much in carload lots, so much in less than carload lots. That certainly it had a right to do; the Clayton act itself expressly recognizes the existence of this right. Under the rule which the company had legitimately established for the conduct of its own business, the tea company could not buy from it, being a retailer. Nevertheless, for a time the Cream of Wheat Co. made an exception to its rule and sold to the tea company under some arrangement, which, as defendant thought, would not make the wholesalers with whom it dealt critical of the exception. On a certain day the Cream of Wheat Co. decided that it would no longer sell to this retailer at all, and since then it has not sold to complainant. There was no contract between the two which bound defendant to sell to complainant for any specified period of time.

This suit is really brought to force the Cream of Wheat Co. to continue to sell this single retailer, as it sells to the wholesalers who trade with it. Much has been said about the reason why defendant ceased to treat complainant as an exception to its rule; failure of the latter to live up to some arrangement, etc. All that seems to be wholly immaterial. The business of the Cream of Wheat Co. is not a monopoly, or even a quasi monopoly. Really it is selling purified wheat middlings and its whole business covers about 1 per cent. of that product. It makes its own selection of what by-products of the Sanitary Jar Racks which cost but little more than jars with covers

All over the country the new Sanitary Steel Slide Display Racks, which are sold at a price within reach of any dealer, have met with a wonderful response. Dealers everywhere are finding that the purchase of this rack is not an outgo but an income; that it pays for itself in a few months.

It conforms to the sanitary laws of the state, the demands of critical customers, and the desire of the dealer to sell goods in an attractive shape and a convenient manner.

Being made from band steel it cannot be broken, as is the case with heavy castings, and is equipped with casters so that it is easily moved.

Slides work with little friction, do not get out of order, and jars have neck, preventing slopping, and plate glass covers fit tightly, effectively sputting out air and insects.

milling process it will put up and and sells what it puts up under marks which tell the purchaser that these middlings are its own selection. It is open to Brown, Jones and Robinson to make their selections out of the other 99 per cent. of purified middlings and put them up and sell them; possibly one or more of them may prove to be better selectors than defendant, or may persuade the public that they are. It is difficult to see how into such a business as that any novel and exceptional rule of law is to be imported.

An additional portion of the decision is reproduced and discussed on the editorial page.

An Attack From a New Angle on Charging for Ham and Bacon Packings

California Weights and Measures Authorities Will Claim That It Constitutes Giving of Short Weight.

The food authorities of California are about to attack the practice of packing hams and bacon in heavy canvas packings and charging for them at gross weight, from a new angle. A while ago they attempted to contend that meat so packed was package goods and that the net weight must be stated on the label. This contention was defeated, and now they will test the question under the general weights and measures act, which reads as follows:—

Any person who * * * shall sell or offer or expose for sale any commodity, produce, article or thing in a less quantity than the true net weight or true net measure or in a less quantity than he represents it to be or contain, shall be guilty of a misdemeanor.

The theory will be that a ham weighing so many pounds and wrapped in a packing weighing so many ounces, is illegally charged for when the price is based on the weight of the ham plus the weight of the packing. The packers say they will fight.

Corporation, has been elected a director and vice-president of that organization. Mr. Graham is the Graham of the Graham-Chisholm Co., printers. He disposed of his interest in that concern about a year ago to devote his time to the United Profit-Sharing Co., which had just been organized.

Edmund A. Whittier, secretary American Fair Trade League, has gone to Washington to begin the campaign in the interest of the Stevens Bill. He claims that 162 members of the House have agreed to support it. The complete House membership is 435. It is expected that the bill will be taken up shortly after the holidays.

Receivers of California products in this city say that never in their recollection has transportation service from the coast to the East been in such a congested condition as it is in now. Everywhere goods start from the coast is reporting serious shortage in cars, and all freights are several days behind hand in arriving. The reason for this is that the Panama Canal is out of the running for the time being and considerable of the freight which would have come through the Canal now has to come by rail. Ships are reported to be almost unobtainable, and the situation is quite serious.

SUMMARIZED MARKET CONDITIONS.

Tea uneventful. Demand confined to actual needs. Prices unchanged.—Coffee somewhat unsettled, and actual coffee weaker for the week, meaning particularly Rio and Santos; lower market in Brazil is the reason. Milds unchanged and quiet. Java and Mocha unchanged and quiet.—Sugar higher for the week, but closes quiet and barely steady. Refiners all asking cents for granulated. Raws have reached 5.14, but are down around 5 cents.—Tomatoes stronger. Practically all holders ask 90 cent f. o. b. in a large way for Maryland 3s. Other canned goods entirely unchanged. Peas somewhat firmer.—All canned fish unchanged but firm, particularly salmon. Prunes somewhat irregular, but firm and high both on the coast and in the East. Spot demand small. Other dried fruits unchanged. Apricots firmer. Currants still very firm and high.—Wheat firm on account of light offerings. Market still very speculative.—Flour shade lower for the week, with demand light.

THE VALUE OF BRIGHT STORES
The difficulty of making a sale—whether it be dry goods or vegetables, jewelry or shoes—is increased tenfold in a poorly lighted store. Other things being equal, the Electrically lighted shop will do more business than the store which uses other illuminants. "Indoor Daylight" can only be obtained by the use of Mazda Electric lamps.

The Grocery Markets

Tea.

There has been no change in the price of tea during the week. Everything is well maintained and vigorous are especially firm on account of the expectation that the exports of this country will be very much smaller than last year. The present demand for tea is good.

Coffee.

The coffee market is dull, heavy and inclined to be weak. This applies particularly to Rio and Santos. Rio 7s, which have been firm because of scarcity, are a shade weaker. The reason appears to be an easier feeling in Brazil caused by a greater willingness on the part of holders to sell. Mild coffees are unchanged and quiet. Java and Java unchanged and selling moderately.

Sugar.

The sugar market has made some further advances during the week, as the week closes all refiners are asking 6 cents for granulated. Raw sugar, on account of scarcity, has also gone very high and sales have been made as high as 5.14 cents, but the market closes on a basis of 5.02 cents. Some domestic granulated is being offered in foreign markets at 5.75 cents. This present situation is caused by the scarcity of raw sugar and the fact that refiners have had to come into the market to buy at any price. As the week closed refiners have a high sugar to last them for a while and the feeling is heavier, but without the probability of any immediate decline. The consumptive demand for sugar is fair.

Syrup and Molasses.

Glucose shows no change for the week. Compound syrup is in moderate demand on account of the weather. Prices unchanged. Pure syrup unchanged for the week; fair demand. Molasses firm with a high outlook; demand quiet.

Fish.

There is no change to report in the mackerel situation for the week. New way mackerel are still very high on account of scarcity, this applying to stock on spot and in Norway. Shore mackerel are about the same, meaning the fishing season, and although the yield has been good, there appears to be no disposition to cut prices. The situation in shore mackerel is firm. Cod, hake and haddock are unchanged and quiet. Salmon is just where it has been for some weeks. Domestic sardines are unchanged from a week ago. Demand light. Imported sardines scarce and high.

Canned Goods.

Tomatoes are firmer than a week ago, and practically all packers are now asking 90 cents in a large way f. o. b. for Maryland 3s. The situation is exceedingly firm. Corn and peas show no change whatever for the week and only a moderate demand. Apples are quiet at ruling prices. The principal demand will not come until spring. California canned goods show no change and light demand. Small Eastern staple canned goods unchanged and dull.

Dried Fruits.

Prunes are firm on the coast and in Eastern markets, but show no change for the week. The demand is fair. Peaches are firmer on the coast, although not as yet in the East. An advance in peaches need not be unexpected. Apricots and raisins are unchanged on last week's basis. There have been some receipts of currants, but not enough to affect the market.

Butter.

There is a very active demand for all grades of butter. The market is firm at an advance of 1 cent. Receipts are very light, and fancy butter is extremely scarce and is cleaned up on arrival. The situation is very firm on the present basis, and if there is any further change it is likely to be an advance.

Eggs.

New-laid eggs continue very scarce, and the market is firm on the present basis. Receipts clean up immediately on arrival, and there will probably be no relief from the present high-priced situation for some time.

Cheese.

The cheese market is firm at the present basis with an active consumptive demand. The situation is healthy and looks as if it were going to remain so, with about unchanged prices for an indefinite time.

Beans and Peas.

Pea beans are higher than a week ago by about 15 cents per bushel, due to scarcity in the primary markets. The demand is light. Marrows and California limas are unchanged on last week's basis; fair demand. Scotch peas are very dull by reason of prices which the trade are not willing to pay. Green dried peas are steady on last week's basis with a fair demand.

Provisions.

Regular hams are firm at an advance of 1/4 to 1/2 cent and with an active consumptive demand. Skin-back hams are relatively more plentiful and are steady and unchanged. Other cuts of smoked meats are unchanged and in seasonable demand. Pure and compound lard are steady and unchanged without any particular change in sight. Dried beef, canned meats and barreled pork all unchanged and in light request.

Poultry.

The receipts of turkeys so far have been very light, and fine stock is bringing around 28 cents per pound. Scarcity on spot is because last year a number of holders sent large quantities of stock to market a week or ten days before Thanksgiving and it struck a warm spell and there was a slump. From now on there will be increased receipts of turkeys, but not enough to cause any great decline in price. There seems to be plenty of turkeys in the country. Roasting chickens are in fair supply and fine stock is worth 21 cents. Fowls are ample and are bringing 20 cents. Long Island ducks are in good demand and rule from 21 to 22 cents. Geese are not figuring in the market at present.

INDIVIDUAL MARKET REPORTS.

Imported Fish Specialties.

Herrings have always been considered one of the cheapest and most wholesome food products on the market. To-day they have become a luxury, and the price of herrings has become so high that the housewife who formerly bought a few herrings at a time now buys half a herring; we mean just exactly what we say, one herring cut in half, and pays as much for this half herring as she used to pay in ordinary years for two ordinary, good herrings. Of course, it is only natural that the consumption of herrings should decline, and it has declined; but if the demand were as big as it is in ordinary years, the supply would be exhausted before one could say "boo!" We are speaking, of course, of imported herrings. American herrings are somewhat more plentiful, although also scarce and very high. Of course, the quality of the American herrings cannot be compared with the foreign herrings. They taste differently, it is a different fish altogether, and these people who are herring eaters from their youth on, would rather do without herrings than buy the American product.

Holland herrings continue scarce because hardly any one imported any, owing to their high price.

Scotch herrings continue scarce, as shipments forthcoming are very small and prices continue as high as ever.

Norwegian herrings are just as scarce as ever, and continue to advance in price. There may be a relief from the winter caught Norway herrings should they strike Norway in large quantities, but this of course no one can tell. The fishing ought to begin in December or January, and we all hope that it will be a very big one, so that we may be able to import herrings at a reasonable figure and supply our trade. At the present moment the countries at war are taking all the supplies, irrespective of price.

As we have stated in our previous reports, the catch of Norway mackerel has been one of the shortest on record. The prices are enormously high. The first shipment of new fall fat mackerel is due to arrive here during the next few days, and while the trade is hesitating about placing big orders at the present asking prices, they are taking those goods in a hand-to-mouth way, and even in this way the stock ought to be cleared up very shortly, because there will not be very many of those mackerel this season. Naturally, this has an influence on the market for Irish mackerel, which are also continuing to advance in price.

We would rather not speak of the imported sardine market, because this article, being one of our foremost specialties, we are almost tempted to use blasphemous language at our hard luck. We had, naturally a large stock, and as we all do here in America, have been selling our sardines at the old prices, or nearly that, as long as we had them, and even then our trade did not fall over each other to clear us out, but gradually we are coming to the end of our rope, and when we try to get new supplies we are up against it. Our friends, the people at war now, are paying all kinds of prices for sardines, and it makes no difference to them how much they advance the market. Of course, they want the stuff, although we never knew that they would use so many sardines for war purposes, and if we want to get any sardines we simply have to compete with them, and we simply cannot compete because the trade here will not pay these high prices, or at least they are not willing to pay these high prices at the present moment, but will have to pay them after the old stocks here are all cleared and it is only a question of a very short time before the old stocks are entirely cleared out, and when they will either have to pay these high prices or simply go without sardines. That is all there is about it.

We have been hoping that when the catch begins, both in Norway and Portugal, that the catch would be so big that probably prices would somewhat recede; but all our hopes have been shattered. In Norway they have so far had practically no catch. In Portugal the catch seems to be quite good, but instead of prices going down they are going up; so there we are. We are afraid to buy at these high prices, because we feel that our trade here will not take very kindly to paying these extraordinarily high and exorbitant prices. At any rate, the demand is very good for all kinds of imported sardines; in fact, too good to please us, because this is likely to clean out our stocks much quicker than we should really like to see them go.

Sweden has prohibited the exportation of all kinds of fish, both salt and preserved. Consequently there is rather a scarcity of anchovies and other spiced fish and prices are high.

Wheat and Flour.

Prices are always relative. There are many traders who believe that wheat should decline 15 or 20 cents per bushel. They say that the market cannot stand up against these enormous primary receipts and before many weeks there will be such a congestion that the transportation companies will be unable to cope with them. Those who share this opinion see only the enormous crops raised in Canada and our own Northwest and pay little heed to what in our opinion is of vastly more importance as a market factor. On the other hand, many far-sighted operators believe that even in the face of congestion there will be no serious decline, and even if there should be the loss would be soon regained. They believe that the 1915 crop of winter wheat has been greatly overestimated, and that it is seen that the area sown to the new winter wheat crop is only about 80 per cent. of last year, and the conditions around 85 per cent., the 1916 crop is likely to be a very short one, and that farmers will be disposed to hold their wheat for better prices.

We have discussed in our earlier letters the moisture content of the winter wheat crop this year as compared with last and called your attention to the fact that in the eight leading winter wheat States, which raised over 400,000,000 bushels of wheat, less than 175,000,000 bushels was fit for human food, and that while we had a quantitative surplus, it would prove to be a qualitative shortage.

The receipts of wheat at Kansas City for the first four months of the crop are barely 60 per cent. of the same period last year, and there is a difference in price of 50 cents per bushel between the best and the poorest quality.

Reports are coming in from all sections showing a very much reduced area, which corroborates the estimate of one of four leading crop experts, namely, 34,600,000 acres, which is 84 per cent. of last year's area. The Ohio State report, just issued, shows that the area seeded to winter wheat this year is but 82 per cent. of the area harvested last year, and the condition is given as 85 per cent., as against 101 per cent. last year, and this is but a forerunner of what we may expect in the Government report, which will be issued in December, giving the area and condition of winter wheat. If we are to have only 34,600,000 acres and the conditions December 1st is around 80 per cent., as is at present indicated, our 1916 crop will hardly exceed 400,000,000 bushels. The present condition is almost a parallel with the crops of 1911 and 1912.

In view of the prospect of such a shortage in the 1916 crop, we warn our friends not to become too bearish, even though there should be an overwhelming movement from the farm. Wheat is going out of the country at a very rapid rate and, notwithstanding the heavy receipts at primary points, prices refuse to decline. The market was a little scared when it was announced that our visible supply had increased 7,000,000 bushels, coincident with an increase of 4,000,000 bushels in the Canadian visible, making a total of 57,000,000 bushels. On November 14th last year the visible in the United States and Canada was 92,546,000 bushels, and even though we should have another huge increase this week the total will be far short of the same date a year ago.

Standard Canned Goods.

Steady buying of tomatoes again this week is causing a firmer feeling and the market looks stronger ahead, East and West. Unless it is another false alarm the present movement toward a higher level of prices is liable to extend to all sections of the country, including the Pacific coast, where they thought they had some to spare for the Eastern markets. The weak sellers of tomatoes here during October were the small country canners who have no proper facilities for storing the goods in their canneries during the winter months. That class of sellers is said to be pretty well sold out, and the goods now on sale are in stronger hands. Holders of tomatoes are certainly optimistic in their view of the outlook.

Hurry up orders for tomatoes came from those markets served by the rail and lake lines which withdraw their low freight rates this month. There were no big orders from individual buyers, though the average size of them this week was larger than the week before. Orders were received from the other sections of the country for shipment in the usual routine, without any rush or hurry, so that sort of steady, consistent buying is what is relied upon to sustain the market prices during the winter months. The weather continues to be very favorable for the shipment of canned goods before they are liable to freeze on the road, but, of course, the weather conditions may change in other way at any time without much notice.

There was excellent buying of sweet potatoes again, the low prices attracting further orders from jobbers who seldom, or never, buy them in straight carloads, and they are now working prompt attention. The demand for cheap corn is absorbing the supply of and there is more buying of the better brands of standard Maine style corn, well as for fancy shoepeg corn. Low priced peas have been going out steadily in little lots that the stocks have dwindled to small proportions. Spinach is another steady seller. In the remaining articles of vegetables there was nothing this week outside of the usual small daily orders for assorted shipments.

"Doing Stunts That Economy Stores Can't Do."

I see the editor's still talking about meeting the Economy stores and going 'em one better.

I don't know whether it was him or not, but somebody on the front cover last week said the way to do it was to do some stunt that the Economy stores don't do. Or can't do, I disremember which.

Wonder what he thinks it would be.

Of course there's a whole bunch of stunts that the Economy stores don't do. I can think of a thousand or so right now. They might work, too.

For instance, you could hire nothing but girls for clerks, and let one of 'em kiss a customer with every pound of 20-cent tea. With every pound of dollar tea, let all of 'em kiss the customer. I hear somebody saying that scheme would be punk because all the customers are women. But I'm ready for you on that, too—forty-eight hours after you advertised that scheme, all the customers would be men. And that would be a good thing, too, for anybody'd rather sell to men than they would women. I didn't think of that when I first invented the scheme—that really's the best part of it.

And there's even another end to it. You could still have men clerks if you wanted to, but pick kings—the best-looking chaps you could get. Let them do the kissing. Now can you see the old maids forming in line? You'd sell five tons of tea in a week, either way you worked it.

That's a stunt none of the Economy stores are working as far as I can see, Mr. Editor. Is that something like you mean? There's a whole lot more schemes, but they'd have to be outside of regular business, for inside regular business the Economy stores are doing about everything there is to do. They're selling cheap, which means everything to most people, without anything else.

I'll tell you another stunt that you fellows can work that the Economy stores ain't working—you can give your goods away and deliver 'em to people's houses. I'm sure that would go. Why should you expect people to pay you a profit anyway? Who are you, that you think you ought to get a profit—you conceit thing, you! Don't you know you're on earth to accommodate the public? I know you think you've got to eat, but that's your fault. You eat too much anyway—one meal a week's enough for any grocer. Of course you've got a family, but that ain't my fault—you got 'em yourself—you oughtn't to have any family. Let your wife go to work—let her make little pink bags and sell 'em for $8 apiece to blind old ladies with a million dollars.

Competing with the Economy stores is easy enough when you study it out. It's nothing to me and the editor—we can do it with one hand tied behind us.

I'd just like to see the editor owning a store right next to an Economy store. Gee, but I'd give a leg to see that! He weighs about eighty-five pounds with his ulster on, and when he'd got up against that situation I'll bet he'd be down to 48 in about a week. I'd like to see him putting over his stunts that the Economy stores ain't doing. One of 'em I'm sure he'd put over—being found dead in his bed at the end of the first month.

I say again what I said awhile back about the Economy stores. The way I'd do it is to do everything the Economy stores do. You can do it, and you've got the advantage of being in the same church and the same lodge with half the people in the town. Don't try to meet the cut stores—go right along with 'em. THE STROLLER.

Biggest Killing Yet in a Canned Goods Sale.

Lively Firm of Iowa Grocers Sell 350 Cases of Canned Fruits in a Week in a Town of 400. Their Own Description of How They Did It.

Messrs. Kuhl & Loehr, grocers of Defiance, Iowa, made what is probably the biggest killing with a special canned goods sale that has ever been made under similar conditions. They sold 350 cases of canned goods in one week, in a town of only 400 people. From a description of their campaign, the following is condensed:—

We received a price on future canned fruit about the latter part of June. We then asked ourselves this question, "Why shouldn't we get out and sell canned fruit instead of having the customers buy their fruit from somebody else or the box-car merchants, and then come to us and buy the sugar on which we would have made probably 25 cents per 100 pounds, and probably have it charged at that." We decided we would try it. So we bought the fruit and had it shipped in. The next day after we received it, being Saturday, we emptied a can of each of the canned fruits into quart glass jars. We then made out a table of prices whereby a customer received a better price if two, three or four dozen were bought instead of one.

Herewith we show you the table of prices and quantity as we had it:

Peaches.—one dozen, $2.20 per dozen, or 18¼ cents per can; two dozen, $2.10 per dozen or 17½ cents per can; three dozen, $2.05 per dozen, or 17 cents per can; four dozen, $2 per dozen, or 16⅔ cents per can.

Pretty soon nearly everybody was buying in four-dozen lots or more. We had such good success the first day that we made up another sample lot, packed the jars containing the fruit into a suit case and made a house-to-house canvass of the town, making these trips only in the morning. We also caught the farmer trade as it came into the store. Our best sellers were peaches, apricots and pineapples. We sold 350 cases, 700 dozen. The population of our town is about 400. We sold to about 150 customers making an average of between four or five dozen to a customer. The largest sale we made was 20 dozen to one customer, others were from one to fourteen dozen.

338.—The Legality of Exclusive Selling Contracts Under the Clayton Act.

The following letter gives me the opportunity to write something about the legality of exclusive contracts under the Clayton act, which should be interesting to every reader of these articles, no matter what line he is in:—

Evansville, Ind., Nov. 9, 1915.
"American Stationer,"
New York City.

Gentlemen:—Have you taken up in your legal department or published any articles in your magazine on the subject of exclusive contracts? Can you inform us whether it is now legal for a house to make a contract with an agent, one of the terms of the contract being they cannot carry any other conflicting line?

Thanking you in advance for your courtesy, we are,
Yours truly,
SMITH & BUTTERFIELD CO.

The above correspondents are stationers, but the exclusive contract is used in probably every line of merchandising in some form or other, therefore this article is of general application.

Exclusive trade contracts can be made in several ways:—

A manufacturer may say to a retailer, "If you will handle my brand in your town, and feature it, I will sell it to nobody else," or he may say the same thing to a jobber. Or

A manufacturer may say to a retailer or a jobber, "I will sell you my brand only on condition that you do not handle the brands of my competitors."

Or it may be done in a variety of other ways, but the two above are the ways which usually come into question.

Are such contracts legal under the Clayton act?

It can hardly be doubted that they were legal before the Clayton act passed, under court decisions, although the Government often contended the contrary and attacked them even after the court had decided in other cases that they were perfectly legal. The courts all held that they were simply one way of choosing one's customers, which everybody except a public service corporation has a right to do. The squarest, clearest decision on the subject that I know of is in Whitwell vs. Continental Tobacco Co. (125 Fed. Rep. 454), in which the exclusive contract of the tobacco company named came into question. The Continental Tobacco Co. made a price on its products to such retailers as would refuse to handle competitive products, and a much higher price—in fact a prohibitive price—to retailers who would not so refuse. The court said:—

The tobacco company and its competitors were not dealing in articles of prime necessity, like corn and coal, nor were they rendering public or quasi-public service, like railroad and gas corporations. Each of them, therefore, had the right to refuse to sell its commodities at any price. Each had the right to fix the prices at which it would dispose of them, and the terms upon which it would contract to sell them. Each of them had the right to determine with what persons it would make its contracts of sale. * * * The exercise of these undoubted rights is essential to the very existence of free competition, and so long as their exercise by any person or corporation in no way deprives competitors of the same rights, or restricts them in the use of these rights, it is difficult to perceive how their exercise can constitute any restriction upon competition or any restraint upon interstate trade.

The acts of the defendant which are alleged by the complaint in this action to constitute an unlawful restraint upon interstate commerce are nothing more than the lawful exercise of these unquestioned rights which are indispensable to the existence of competition or to the conduct of trade. The tobacco company and its employee fixed the prices of its commodities so high that the plaintiff could not profitably buy them. This was no restriction upon free competition, because it left the rivals of the company free to sell their competing commodities at any price which they elected to charge for them. It would have been no violation of the law under consideration if the tobacco company and its employee had combined to refuse to sell any of its commodities at any price, and to retire from the business in which they were engaged entirely. Much less could it be a violation of this act for them to fix their prices too high for profitable investment by the plaintiff.

The tobacco company and its employee sold its product to customers who refrained from dealing in the goods of its competitors at prices which rendered their purchases profitable. But there was no restriction upon competition here, because this act left the rivals of the tobacco company free to sell their competing commodities to other purchasers than those who bought of the defendants, and free to compete for sales to the customers of the tobacco company offering to them goods at low prices or on better terms than those secured from that company. The tobacco company and its employees were not required, like competitors engaged in public or quasi-public service, to sell to all applicants who sought to buy, or to sell to all tending purchasers at the same prices. They had the right to select their customers, to sell and refuse to sell to whomsoever they chose, and to fix different prices for sales of the same commodity to different persons. In the exercise of this right they selected those persons who would refrain from handling the goods of their competitors as their customers, selling their products to them at lower prices than they offered to others. There was nothing in this selection, or in the means

Possible Cases Under New Pennsylvania Workmen's Compensation Act

Becomes Operative Next January 1st, and Makes all Retail Merchants Within the State Liable for Accidents to Their Employees While Latter are at Work.

[Inasmuch as the new Pennsylvania Workmen's Compensation Law which becomes operative next January 1st, affects every grocer and general storekeeper within the State, the "Modern Merchant and Grocery World" will publish from time to time some possible cases which may arise under it, in the experience of the average grocer or general storekeeper. A full digest of the act was published in the issue of July 26th last. Readers hereof will remember that it practically makes it compulsory for employers to pay damages to employees who meet with accidents in the course of their regular work.—Ed.]

Possible Case No. 9.

Jones & Smith are large retail grocers doing business in a good-sized city. They make no written contracts with their clerks, but merely hire them without stating the terms, at so much per week. The concern employs two clerks, one just before the Workmen's Compensation Act goes into effect (on January 1, 1916) and one just afterward. Both are employed at $16 per week without written contract.

These men are sent to the cellar one day after the compensation law has become operative and while moving some heavy goods, both are knocked down by a barrel and badly injured. One has an arm broken and a back strained and the other breaks a leg and has slight concussion of the brain. Both make claims upon Jones & Smith for damage as the result of the accident. Jones & Smith refuse to pay anything to the clerk who was hired before the law became operative, because he was employed before the law went into effect, when workmen's compensation did not exist, and over they had never agreed to compensation under the act. He refused to pay anything to the clerk hired after the law went into effect because they never agreed to accept the law as to him.

Both defences will fail, though, because contracts of employment lasting beyond December 31, 1915, will be taken under the law as subject to workmen's compensation unless a statement to the contrary was filed in the Department of Labor at Harrisburg before December 31, 1915. The second defence also fails, because all contracts of employment made after December 31, 1915, are subject to workmen's compensation unless they expressly state the contrary.

Jones & Smith will have to pay each of these clerks 50 per cent of his wages until they can get again.

ow comes the Clayton act, ed a year or so ago. Section ectly applies to exclusive con- s:—

ec. 3. That it shall be unlawful any person engaged in com- ee in the course of such com- ee, to lease or make a sale or tract for sale, of goods, wares, chandise, machinery, supplies or er commodities, whether patented unpatented, for use, consumption resale within the United States any Territory thereof or the Dis- t of Columbia or any insular session or other place under the isdiction of the United States, to fix a price charged therefor, discount from or rebate upon, h price, on the condition, agree- nt or understanding that the ee or purchaser thereof shall use or deal in the goods, wares, chandise, machinery, supplies or er commodities of a competitor competitors of the lessor or sell- where the effect of such lease, e or contract for sale or such dition, agreement or understand- may be to substantially lessen petition or tend to create a nopoly in any line of commerce.

italicize the last several words, use they are the crux of the en- section. Exclusive contracts forbidden if they tend to substantially lessen competition or to create a monopoly, and not other- wise.

That is therefore the answer to the problem propounded by the above correspondents.

Now what is meant by lessening competition and creating a monop- oly. I can show my own idea of it by some illustrations. Bear in mind that in all anti-monopoly law, what is meant by monopoly is monopoly of a staple—a monopoly of corn, or wheat, or flour, rather than a monopoly of the Gold Medal brand of flour. The owners of the Gold Medal brand have an absolute monopoly in that—possibly given to them by the Government itself through the Patent Office—but no- body will be permitted to acquire a monopoly of flour as a commodity.

Therefore suppose an operator had in some way secured 75 per cent. of all the flour in the United States. He held 75 per cent. and all the other holders together held 25 per cent. Of course 25 per cent. of the supply is not enough to feed the entire demand, which must therefore be fed in large part from the 75 per cent., or not fed at all.

My view is that in such a case this 75 per cent. holder of flour could not make exclusive contracts with retailers or jobbers, for the reason that they would undoubtedly tend to strengthen the control which he already held in the flour market. A contract refusing to supply the demand—which must be supplied by him or not at all—unless the buyer refused to handle other goods, would certainly tend to "sub- stantially lessen competition and tend to create a monopoly."

Now consider another case in which in my judgment exclusive selling contracts are not illegal under the Clayton act. John Jones is a flour operator—a small man, controlling but a very small per- centage of the supply and the trade. He has a brand "Phenomenon" which is merely a good winter wheat flour packed under that name. My judgment is that John Jones can with perfect legality tie up any buyer he has, not to sell any other flour. Why can he do this legally when the other man cannot? Be- cause he does not control the mar- ket—he does not control the major part of the supply—he controls nothing but his own trade-mark. If he refuses to sell a customer because that customer wants to sell other brands too, no monopoly is created, nor is competition lessened. John Jones' competitors are left even more free than they were before to go in and sell the buyer. And if one of John Jones' customers pre- fers to sell the Phenomenon brand rather than dozens of others which he could freely get and sell if he chose, certainly there is nothing like monopoly or restrained compe- tition about it.

The exclusive selling contract where a seller, not controlling the market, merely gets exclusive cus- tomers for his brand, are in my judgment perfectly legal under the Clayton act. I should not be sur- prised to see the Government take a contrary view, however, for they believed they were illegal even after many courts had decided them legal.

West Produces a Million Boxes Less Apples This Year Than Last.

The production of apples in the Pa- cific Northwest for 1914 and 1915, with the figures for the latter year estimated, may be stated as:—

	1914 Boxes.	1915 Boxes.
Washington ..	8,300,000	7,092,000
Oregon	3,600,000	3,402,000
Idaho	1,700,000	1,708,000
Montana	900,000	1,036,000
Total	14,500,000	13,238,000

Three boxes of apples are equal to one barrel. The best authorities place the apple shipments of the present sea- son out of the Pacific Northwest at 6,000 cars, which will average in the neighborhood of $1.10 to $1.25 per box, f. o. b. shipping point—not, however, net to the grower, to whom the price would be about 15 cents per box less. Apples exported to Europe from this section have been and will be this sea- son very limited in amount. One of the largest fruit associations estimates that up to the present time it has ex- ported only seven cars to Europe. About 1,200 cars are expected to go from this section direct to New York and some 200 cars have been passed through Spokane for local and export trade.

REPRESENTATIVE IN EVERY TOWN

S. H. POOL, Resident Manager

330 WALNUT STREET :: PHILADELPHIA, PA.

West Chester, Pa., Oct. 21, 1915.
To the Editor.

Dear Sir:—We are inclosing in this letter, also sending separate, advertising matter used by us for newspapers and circular work.

We note from observation that your criticism of the advertising sent you by subscribers is mostly condemning. We will appreciate all the pointers you can give, but please don't abuse our work too much, lest we be too timid to send you more from time to time.

Yours truly,

J. J. LEWIS,

Advertising Manager H. D. Hubbs.

It is unfortunate that I do have to find fault with a great deal of the advertising that comes into this department. I believe everybody understands, however, that I don't do it because I like to, but because I think that finding fault will be helpful. That is what people send their advertising into me for—for my honest opinion as to its merits. And that is what I always give them.

Mr. Lewis, of the Hubbs store, sends me in quite a batch of stuff. There is a very large circular about the size of a handbill, and various newspaper advertisements, ranging in size from five inches single column up to thirteen inches double column. The advertising is all principally price advertising. Witness the advertisement I am reproducing, which is a fair type of all of it. It filled a space thirteen inches along across two columns.

You see there is nothing here but prices. Not a word of praise or explanation for the goods except the single word "luscious" as applied to grapefruit. I looked carefully over the large circular, as large as an ordinary newspaper page. By actual count thirty-two articles are advertised on it, and only about half have something outside the price said about them. In only fifteen cases has even a word been said about the quality or desirability. Gentlemen, I think this is a mistake. Sometimes the price alone is enough. If, for instance, you were cutting the price of Royal Baking Powder or some other equally well known article—it would not be necessary to do anything more than to mention its to everybody. I believe that in most cases it is a waste of time, space and money to merely advertise the price of an article whose quality can vary, and which can

It means nothing at all. Yet means just as much as to advertise some of the articles that have been advertised above, at a flat price. doesn't take much space to say about food products—usually word or two is enough. Just a persuasive, appetite-creating sentence calculated to make people want to buy.

Bought Simply Because
She Liked the Glass Package

It's odd what little things make sales sometimes. A grocer told us the other day that the day before a woman had bought a jar of Croft's Swiss Milk Cocoa simply because she liked the novelty of the glass package. She didn't ask any questions about the peculiar characteristics of the cocoa; she liked the glass jar and bought.

There is a point in that for grocers who study the public—the useful novelty is usually the seller.

Croft's Swiss Milk Cocoa, the only cocoa packed in glass, has a smoother flavor than any other cocoa made. That is because our exclusive process of making takes out certain substances that other manufacturers leave in.

Will you mention the "Modern Merchant and Grocery World" when you write?

PERFECTLY SIMPLE

No complication. Sell an Indexed Coupon Book for cash (in advance) and treat as a cash sale. Sell on credit and there is but one charge for the book—no other bookkeeping. They hold your transient cash customer. If you do not use them generally you should have a few to control the grouchy customer—the one who over-runs his credit—the one who is slow pay—the one who always disputes the account and others you know of. We sell them in any quantities, all sizes and f. o. b. destination anywhere in the United States.

Let us send you literature and samples. No charge. No obligations

Attorney General's Department Says State Food Laws Can Be Enforced Against Outside Products Even Though They Conform With Federal Food Law

An Official Answer to the Oft-repeated Contention That the Decision in the Wisconsin Karo Syrup Case Made a State Helpless to Enforce Its Own Laws Against a Product Which Complied with the Federal Act.

During the week the Attorney General's Department of Pennsylvania has given to the Dairy and Food Commissioner an opinion that the Pennsylvania State food law could be enforced against any product shipped into the State from outside, which was illegal under the State act, even though it complied fully with the Federal Food Act. It has been contended that the decision in the McDermott Karo syrup case prevented that.

A full discussion of the opinion and its effect upon the food situation, appears on the editorial page. The opinion is as follows:—

You propound the following question:—

"If a box containing two or more dozen bottles of catsup, properly sealed and labeled in conformity with the National Food and Drugs Act of June 30, 1906, and shipped from Rochester, N. Y., to a retail merchant in Pennsylvania, is opened and the bottles placed upon the shelves of the store for sale, and upon purchase by an agent of this Department, and on analysis the catsup is found to violate the pure food laws of this State, can the Pennsylvania laws be enforced?"

With your request you submit a letter of Curtice Bros. & Co., of Rochester, N. Y., a copy of a letter of the State Food and Drug Commissioner of Indianapolis and an opinion of the Attorney-General of Indiana, all to the effect that there can be no interference with a grocer who sells to his customer a single bottle of catsup if it complies with the National Food and Drugs Act, even though it violates the laws of the State, when such bottle of catsup was a part of the shipment from another State and originally packed in a larger case or box.

Your inquiry and the correspondence submitted are the result of a misconstruction of the case of McDermott vs. Wisconsin, 228 U. S. 115, 57 Lawyers' Edition 754. The impression prevails since the opinion in that case that a State cannot enforce its pure food laws against single, sealed packages of food misbranded or adulterated according to State laws, if such single packages comply with the provisions of the National Food and Drugs Act of June 30, 1906 (34 St. at Large, 768, Chapter 3,915, U. S. Comp. Stat. Supp. 1911, page 1,354). This impression is not justified by the decision itself. The precise questions in that case were:—

First.—Whether the word "package" as used in the Food and Drugs

Act was limited to "original package" as understood in interstate commerce, or whether it included the goods upon the shelves of a local merchant for sale.

Second.—Whether the Wisconsin law, which required the goods to contain the exclusive labels provided by that statute, and, in effect, prohibited the labels required under the National Food and Drugs Act, was beyond the power of the State to enforce.

The plaintiff in error, a retail merchant in Oregon, Wis., was convicted of violating the Wisconsin statute because he had in his possession with intent to sell and offered for sale, "Karo Corn Syrup" which was not labeled according to the Wisconsin law providing that "the mixture or syrups designated in this section shall have no other designation nor brand than herein required, etc. He had purchased from the wholesale grocers in Chicago 12 half-gallon tin cans of Karo Corn Syrup, the shipment being made in wooden boxes containing the cans, and when the goods were received at the store, the cans were taken from the original boxes and placed on the shelves for sale at retail. The cans were labeled in accordance with the National Pure Food and Drugs Act. That Act provides, as stated in the opinion of McDermott vs. Wilson, page 130:—

"And as to food, if it shall be label or branded so as to deceive or mislead a purchaser, or purport to be a foreign product when not so, or if the contents of the package as originally put up shall have been removed in whole or in part, and other contents placed in such package; or if the package fail to bear a statement of the label as required, or if in package form and the contents are stated in terms of weight or measure, and they are not plainly and correctly stated on the outside of the package; or if the package containing it or its label contain any design or device regarding the ingredients or substances contained therein which are false or misleading in character, the food shall be deemed misbranded."

The court, speaking through Mr. Justice Day, said:—

"That the word 'package' or its equivalent expression, as used by Congress in Sections 7 and 8 in defining what shall constitute adulteration and what shall constitute misbranding within the meaning of the act, clearly refers to the immediate container of the article, which is intended for consumption by the public, there can be no question. And it is sufficient, for the decision of these cases, that we consider the extent of the word 'package' as thus used only, and we therefore have no occasion, and do not attempt, to decide what Congress included in the terms 'original unbroken packages,' as used in the second and tenth sections, and 'unbroken package' in the third section. Within the limitations of its right to regulate interstate commerce, Congress is manifestly aiming at the contents of the package as it shall reach the customer, for whose protection the act was primarily passed, and it is the branding upon the package which contains the article intended for consumption itself which is the subject matter of regulation. Limiting the requirements of the act as to adulteration and misbranding simply to the outside wrapping or box containing the packages intended to be purchased by the customer, so that the importer, by removing and destroying such covering, could prevent the operation of the law on the imported articles yet unsold, would render the act nugatory and its provisions wholly inadequate to accomplish the purposes for which it was passed."

The court also said, page 135:—

"In the view, however, which we take of the case, it is unnecessary to enter upon any extended consideration of the nature and scope of the principles involved in determining what is an original package. For, as we have said, keeping within its constitutional limitations of authority, Congress may determine for itself the character of the means necessary to make its purpose effectual in preventing the shipment in interstate commerce of articles of a harmful character, and to this end may provide the means of inspection, examination and seizure necessary to enforce the prohibitions of the act."

And on page 136:—

"To determine the time when an article passes out of interstate into State jurisdiction for the purpose of taxation is entirely different from deciding when an article which has violated a Federal prohibition becomes immune. The doctrine (of original package) was not intended to limit the right of Congress, now asserted, to keep the channels of interstate commerce free from the carriage of injurious or fraudulently branded articles, and to choose appropriate means to that end. The legislative means provided in the Federal law for its own enforcement may not be thwarted by State legislation having a direct effect to impair the effectual exercise of such means."

The court held that Congress could employ the means to keep interstate commerce free from misbranded articles, even to an inspection of the shelves of a retail grocer after the goods had been removed from the "original package," as known in interstate commerce.

The court also held that a State statute which interfered with such supervisory power over the avenues of commerce was an excessive and illegal exercise of the State's power.

This is the full extent to which the case of McDermott vs. Wisconsin goes.

There is no Pennsylvania pure food statute which excludes, or requires the obliteration of, any labels placed on foods under the United States Food and Drugs Act, nor is there any Pennsylvania statute which interferes with the inspection by the Federal authorities of goods either in original packages, or upon the shelves of retail merchants.

The precise question, then, is whether a Pennsylvania statute may be enforced even if its provisions go farther than the Federal law, but do not interfere with the operation of the Federal statute.

Referring again to the much discussed case of McDermott vs. Wisconsin, it is seen that the court was careful to say in terms that the regulations of Congress would not prevent enforcement of similar regulations by a State for the protection of its people.

Mr. Justice Day said, page 131:—

"While these regulations are within the power of Congress, it by no means follows that the State is not permitted to make regulations, with a view to the protection of its people against fraud or imposition by impure food or drugs. This subject was fully considered by this court in Savage vs. Jones, 225, U. S. 501, 56 L. Ed. 1,182, 32 Sup. Ct. Rep. 715, in which the power of the State to make regulations concerning the same subject matter, reasonable in their terms and not in conflict with the Act of Congress, was recognized and stated, and certain regulations of the State of Indiana were held not to be inconsistent with the Food and Drugs Act of Congress."

Again, on pages 133, 134:—

"Conceding to the State the authority to make regulations consistent with the Federal law for the further protection of its citizen against impure and misbranded food and drugs, we think to permit such regulation as is embodied in this statute is to permit a State to discredit and burden legitimate Federal regulations of interstate commerce to destroy rights arising out of the Federal statute which have accrued both to the Government and the shipper, and to impair the effect of a Federal law which has been enacted under the constitutional power of Congress over the subject."

The essence of the decision found in these words, pages 133, 134:—

"To require the removal or destruction before the goods are sold of the evidence which Congress has by the food and drugs act, as we shall see, provided may be examined to determine the compliance with the regulation of the Federal law, is beyond the power of the State. The Wisconsin act which permits the sale of articles subject to the regulations of interstate commerce only upon condition that they contain the exclusive labels required by the statute is an act in excess of its legitimate power."

The question you propound is practically settled by the case Savage vs. Jones, 225 U. S. 501, L. Ed. 1,182.

That was a suit to restrain a State chemist of Indiana from enforcing an act of that State relating to concentrated commercial feed stuffs. It was alleged that the Indiana act which required certain labels to be affixed to the package, closing in part the ingredients and also required certain statements purchased from the State chemist should be attached as an inspection fee, interfered with interstate commerce and also because Congress had legislated upon the subject of the National Food and Drugs Act, its jurisdiction was exclusive, therefore the Indiana act could not be enforced as to packages received from the outside of the State and sold by the importing purchaser of the same packages.

The court held that the act was not an unconstitutional regulation.

interstate commerce, and also, stated in the syllabus in 56 Law. 1, 183, that:—

"Congress did not by the passage of the Food and Drugs Act of June 30, 1906, for the prevention of adulteration and misbranding of foods and drugs when the subject of interstate commerce, preclude the enactment of the Indiana law prohibiting sales of concentrated commercial feeding stuffs in the original packages, unless there is a compliance as to inspection and analysis and the disclosure of ingredients * * * and with its incidental provisions for the filing of certificate, for registration, and for labels and stamps."

Mr. Justice Hughes, writing the opinion of the court, said, page 524: "The State cannot, under cover of exerting its police powers, undertake what amounts essentially to a regulation of interstate commerce, impose a direct burden upon that commerce." (Citing many authorities.)

"But when the local police regulation has real relation to the suitable protection of the people of the State, and is reasonable in its requirements, it is not invalid because it may incidentally affect interstate commerce, provided it does not conflict with legislation enacted by Congress pursuant to its constitutional authority." (Citing many authorities.)

"Such legislation may, indeed, directly, or incidentally, affect trade in such products transported from one State to another State. But that circumstance does not show that the character alluded to are consistent with the power of Congress to regulate commerce among several States."

Again on page 529:—

"The object of the food and drugs act is to prevent adulteration and misbranding, as therein defined. It prohibits the introduction into any State from any other State 'of any article of food or drugs which are adulterated or misbranded, with the meaning of this act.' The purpose is to keep such articles 'out of the channels of interstate commerce, or, if they enter such commerce, to condemn them while being transported or when they have reached their destinations, provided they remain unloaded, unsold, or in original unbroken packages.'"

And on page 532:—

"Can it be said that Congress, nevertheless, has denied to the State, with respect to the feeding stuffs coming from another State sold in the original packages, the power the State otherwise would have to prevent imposition on the public by making a reasonable and non-discriminatory provision for the disclosure of ingredients and for inspection and analysis? If there be such denial it is to be found in any express declaration to that effect. Undoubtedly Congress, by virtue of its paramount authority over interstate commerce, might have said that such goods should be free from the incidental effect of a State law enacted for these purposes. But it did not so declare."

In the case of Simpson vs. Shepard, 230 U. S. 352, 57 L. Ed. 1,511, the court said:—

"State inspection laws and statutes designed to safeguard the inhabitants of a State from fraud and imposition are valid when reasonable in their requirements, and not in conflict with Federal rules, although they may effect interstate commerce in their relation to articles prepared for export, or by including incidentally those brought into the State, and held for sale in the original imported packages."

If the State can, as decided in Savage vs. Jones, require an additional label disclosing ingredients and also stamps covering cost of inspection to be attached to the original package, without unconstitutional interference with interstate commerce, or with the operation of the National Food and Drugs Act, it certainly can enforce its own laws when food in violation thereof is offered for sale by a citizen of the State to other citizens of the State, even though the food was imported from another State.

It is therefore clear that the pure food statutes of the State of Pennsylvania which do not interfere with the labeling provided by the National Food and Drugs Act, or with the inspection of the Federal authority under that act, do not even incidentally interfere with interstate commerce.

There is another consideration. The enforcement of the pure food laws of the State practically begins where the Federal control ends.

In the case of McDermott vs. Wisconsin, it is said in the opinion, page 136:—

"To make the provisions of the act effectual, Congress has provided not only for the seizure of the goods while being actually transported in interstate commerce, but has also provided for such seizure after such transportation and while the goods remain 'unloaded, unsold or in original and unbroken packages.' The opportunity of inspection en route may be very inadequate. The real opportunity of government inspection may only arise when, as in the present case, the goods as packed have been removed from the outside box in which they were shipped and remain, as the act provides, 'unsold.' It is enough, by the terms of the act, if the articles are unsold, whether in original packages or not."

The Pennsylvania statutes usually contain the language making it illegal to "sell, offer for sale, expose for sale or have in possession with intent to sell," any adulterated or misbranded article of food.

The Federal statute follows the goods from another State into Pennsylvania and on to the shelves of the retail merchant. When the goods get upon the shelves of the retail merchant the State inspection begins. There is no conflict of authority. The enforcement of Pennsylvania laws against goods on shelves of a retail merchant, is not even an incidental control of interstate commerce, nor is it any interference with Federal inspection.

I am aware that this opinion does not appear to be in harmony with the case of Corn Products Refining Co. vs. Weigle, 221 Federal Reporter, 998, and the decree entered in that case which is before me, but not reported, certainly is not in harmony with this opinion, but there is no case in the United States Supreme Court which has gone to the length of the case just quoted, and, as I understand the decisions of that court, the case of Corn Products Refining Co. vs. Weigle has gone farther than any other case in that it completely ousts State inspection of goods that were once in interstate commerce, if such goods happened to be labeled in conformity with the National Food and Drugs Act, and prevents the operation of any State statute upon such goods, even as between a retail resident dealer and the resident consumer of the State. I cannot agree that the passage of the National Food and Drugs Act has such sweeping effect in destroying the police power of the State.

Therefore, specifically answering your inquiry, I am of opinion that after purchase and analysis of a bottle of catsup from the shelves of a store of a retail merchant in Pennsylvania, such catsup is found to violate the pure food laws of this State, such laws may be enforced, even though the catsup has been shipped from Rochester, N. Y., and is sealed and labeled in conformity with the National Food and Drugs Act of June 30, 1906.

I return herewith the correspondence submitted with your request.

Very truly yours,
WM. M. HARGEST,
Deputy Attorney-General.

AMONG THE TRADE.

John W. Cooper, president of the Grocers' and Importers' Exchange in 1895 and a director of that organization for a long time, as well as a well known old time figure in the local wholesale grocery trade, died during the week at the age of 74 years. He was connected with McCahan & Cooper, in the grocery business, for a number of years, but retired from business some time ago. Mr. Cooper was unmarried. He has been Senior Past Master of Vaux Masonic Lodge, No. 393, and Second Senior Past Eminent Commander of St. Johns Commandery, No. 4, Knights Templar.

The Sugar Cane Byproducts Co., to manufacture, buy and trade in sugar cane and the by-products thereof, was incorporated under the laws of Delaware during the week with a capital of $5,000,000. The incorporators are F. R. Hansell, Philadelphia; George H. B. Martin and S. C. Seymour, Camden, N. J.

New Chain Stores at Last Will Open Up.

The opening of the Dayley Groceries, Inc., a chain of stores to be conducted in Detroit, Mich., has been delayed somewhat by the ten-week's illness of Mr. D. W. Dayley. He has recovered and has gone to Detroit to make final arrangements with carpenters, etc., for the first ten stores, and expects them to be ready for business by the first of the year. Mr. Dayley's associate, Mr. L. Lemisch will join him just as soon as he has completed the purchasing of merchandise, etc., in Philadelphia. The Dayley Groceries intend to feature besides economy, sanitation. Everything that can be sold in package form will be ready wrapped for selling. Mr. Dayley intends to personally supervise the packing of goods to insure the highest possible sanitary standard. The number of stores this concern intends to open in Detroit is unlimited. A full description of this scheme was published several weeks ago.

Some Unique Ideas on Chain Store Competition

By a Maryland Retailer Who Has Chain Store Competition to Meet. Novel Suggestion for Notice to Consumer on Retail Packages. Thinks Some Chain Stores Thrive Because of Unfair Discounts.

I inclose herewith an ad. showing you the competition we have to meet. It is the advertisement of the Sanitary Grocery Co., which operates fifty-five stores through this territory. Some of the prices quoted are as follows:—

Eagle Milk, 2 cans for.....	25c
Challenge Milk, can	10c
Pet Milk, tall	8c
Pet Milk, small	4c
Peerless Milk, tall	8c
Peerless Milk, small	4c
Blue Label Catsup, 15c size.....	13c
Blue Label Catsup, 25c size.....	20c
Blue Label Chili Sauce, small.....	15c
Blue Label Chili Sauce, large.....	24c
Ivory Soap	4c
Ivory Soap, 10c size	7c
Fels Soap,	4c
White Naptha Soap	4c
Star Soap, cake	4c
LENOX SOAP, Proctor & Gamble's biggest selling 5-cent brand of soap—Special reduced price at all times, per cake	3c

Every housewife should investigate this Lenox Soap proposition.

I am not complaining about the prices of these articles at all. The concern is a chain system, as you will note, of fifty-five stores, and their goods are supplied by the John C. Letts Grocery Company, in reality one firm. My investigations and watching of the growth of these concerns justify me in accusing most of the jobbers and some of the manufacturers of standard manufactured goods and the well known advertised brands as being the cause of their growth. I would like to use your columns to go into detail on what I know and what I think. To start with I want to say that I find the selling of food products the most interesting business that I know of. I believe that the modern individual progressive grocer will eventually drive the chain system out. If allowed the privilege of your columns I will analyze parts of the ads., the reasons for the chain stores and the proper methods to overcome this evil.

I will first take that part of the ads. showing soaps. They advertise

Ivory Soap at 4 cents. You quote jobbers' price $4.
Ivory Soap at 7 cents. You quote jobbers' price $7.

Fels Soap at 4 cents. You quote jobbers' price $4.
White Naptha Soap at 4 cents. You quote jobbers' price $4.
Star Soap at 4 cents. You quote jobbers' price $4.
Lenox Soap at 3 cents. You quote jobbers' price $3.05.

The ordinary grocer wonders how they can do it. My understanding is that J. C. Letts Grocery Co. pays the advertised price of $4 less 10 and 2 per cent. and some considerable free goods, and of course when they are turned over to the chain stores at just a minimum price for handling, it enables them to run as a special these advertised goods. The first error is that the jobbing profit of 10 and 2 per cent. is a profit based on old fashioned methods. It has and is being demonstrated that a jobber can do business on 1½ per cent. above his actual cost of the goods landed in his warehouse, provided he hauls the goods and pays cash. We are buying all these soaps in single box lots at a range of from $3.54 to $3.73 per 100, so in this case the jobber's profit is exorbitant. If he did not get such a large discount on these goods the chain store would not be able to cut on them as it is a positive proven fact that their expenses are much larger than a well conducted individual grocery establishment has.

I also think that if all the manufacturers of standard advertised goods really wanted price maintenance instead of volume, the following, adapted to each package would answer, and no laws would be needed:—

This Ivory soap is made to retail at 5 cents and only allows the retailer and jobber and ourselves a reasonable profit. If sold at a less price it's either old, damaged or being sold at a cut price to bait you to purchase other non-standard merchandise.

Cut the jobber's discount about 3 per cent., and 1 per cent. for cash, and for the extra 1 per cent. add to size or quality of soap.

DAVID S. VENEZKY
Manager

Hyattsville, Md.,

November 25, 1915.

NOTE.—We gladly publish communication because it is worth it. The suggestion as to notice to go on the retail package is distinctly novel and is worth consideration. We believe the respondent is wrong, however, in statement that the jobber can business on 1½ per cent. We have never heard of such a low percentage—even co-operative buyers plans expect to pay 2 per cent.—

More Argument About the Stevens Bill

Secretary Corey of the National Retail Hardware Association Replies to a Recent Editorial in This Paper. Thinks Only Way to Preserve Profits is to Make Prices Absolutely Uniform.

In a recent issue appeared an article by the editor of this paper on "My Views of the Stevens Bill," which bill, now pending in Congress, will give to manufacturers the right to fix the retail prices at which their goods shall be sold. A reply to this has been written and sent to the editor by Mr. M. L. Corey, secretary of the National Retail Hardware Association, a very strong and influential organization. The policy of this paper has been to be absolutely fair in its discussion of the Stevens bill, presenting both sides; therefore Mr. Corey's argument will be reproduced. First is reproduced the editorial referred to with some paragraphs omitted which are not germane to the discussion, so that the issue may be made clear:—

What I believe about the Stevens bill is this: I believe that no retailer should have a right to take the watch, for instance, which costs him, let us say, 69 cents, cut it to 50 or 60 or even 69. He has no right, because it isn't legitimate merchandising; he cannot take the watch at this price and come out whole. His cut is a liberate, wanton act which, while it may benefit him, will injure the watch as a piece of merchandise so that other retailers will not be able to handle it. And in turn the manufacturer of the watch will be injured and perhaps destroyed. I am in favor of any law or regulation which will prevent cutters from ing this kind of cutting—if it stops with that. The Stevens bill would undoubtedly stop that kind of cutting, but the trouble is it would do something more which would hurt more than the other would help. The Stevens bill would compel all retailers to sell the Ingersoll watch at $1, which is a higher price than many retailers want to sell or need to sell for. It would make the retailer who because he sells for cash or for some other reason, can easily afford to sell the Ingersoll watch for 90 cents, and would compel him to get $1 for it. That I am not in sympathy with the Stevens bill. It robs a merchant of the value of his own initiative, and mulcts the consumer out of money which there is not the slightest justification for requiring him to pay.

If the Stevens bill can be revised so that it will cure wanton and purposeless cutting without at the same time destroying the retailer's right to make proper price reductions, I am in favor of it. As it stands, it is a bad bill and it will never pass.

Mr. Corey replies as follows:—

Argos, Ind., Nov. 16, 1915.

John J. Buckley,
Philadelphia, Pa.

Dear Mr. Buckley:—I am very sorry indeed to note your position regarding the Stevens bill as stated in the "Modern Merchant and Grocery World" of November 15th, page 10.

The hardware line, because of its numerous well-advertised, price-established specialties, has probably suffered most through the overblow of the principle of price maintenance.

If the Stevens bill was enacted only a very few articles in our line would qualify in the price-maintained list, and they would be mostly patented specialties, which by reason of merit, publicity and established reputation, would and should sell to everyone at same price. It takes time and money to build a demand on any good specialty, and we are only encouraged to do extensive introductory work through the hope and expectation that later on profit margins will bring remuneration. At this point the price-cutting competitor, mail order or local, often steps in and stool pigeons the article by quoting it regardless of profit for a selfish and dishonest purpose.

The business world is full of wasted effort and discarded meritorious inventions that have failed because the manufacturer could not maintain profitable price conditions.

To-day the business pirate can destroy quality, reputation and demand faster than it can be created.

The Stevens bill may not be perfect, but it's a long step in the right direction, and in my humble opinion would protect the interest of manufacturer, merchant and consumer.

You mention the Ingersoll dollar watch costing the dealer 69 cents. Counting cost of doing business and considering character of article of guarantee, there is absolutely no excessive profit connected. The man that sells for 90 cents is just as bad as he who sells for less. The consumer paying $1 gets value received, and the injustice comes in when his neighbor buys the same standard article for less money. The lowest advertised price eventually becomes the regular retail price, and when this goes below the profit line no one cares to sell the article, and some substitute of inferior quality usually takes its place. This is going on all the time, but especially is the movement working right now.

My only object in writing you is to urge you to reconsider your position. We want and need your voice and influence in pushing for fair and honest business conditions. As we see it the retailers' rights are not infringed by reasonable price maintenance, but are protected.

Yours very truly,
M. L. COREY,
Secretary.

Questions on New Pennsylvania Workmen's Compensation Act Answered by Chief of Enforcing Commission

Questions Touch Several of the Unsettled Questions That Will Arise Under New Law, Which Becomes Operative January 1.

At a convention of merchants held in Johnstown, Pa., last week, the chief address was by James W. Leech, of Ebensburg, Chief of the State Commission on the Workmen's Compensation Act. The address was explanatory of the new Workmen's Compensation Act, and an interesting feature of it was the answering by Mr. Leech of a number of questions about the new act which were asked by the merchants present. The questions and answers were as follows:—

Query—When a man is working for a firm on commission only, is he in his own employ or under the employ of the firm?

Mr. Leech was of the opinion that if the man came regularly for his goods, if he acted in any real sense as a salesman for some particular firm or firms, that he would be regarded as an employee and come under the compensation act.

Query—When an employee, after an accident, has received the amount due him under the compensation law, is the man for whom he worked exempted from any further damage?

Answer—If the accident was of such a nature as to decrease earning power, or to amount to a total disability, the man would recover under the total disability compensation schedule. The law recognizes that accidents may reduce earning power and provides for such cases.

Query—If I was insured in a casualty company and it failed, what would be the result? Could the employee come back at me the second time?

Answer—The employee is entitled to his compensation. If the casualty company was unable to pay, the employer would have to.

Query—If the employee has received all of the compensation to which he is entitled by the State, would he have a redress for damages aside from the law?

Answer—He would not if he were working under the law. The employee can refuse to work under the law, depending upon a civil action, but he must formally make such an election.

Query—If an employee is not satisfied after the compensation board has decided the points in ref-pensation law does not apply to domestic servants.

Query—Will insurance be taken out in each man's name? Can I change the name as my employees are changed?

Answer—The employees are insured not by name, but as a group. The employer insures a given number of men working at certain given occupations. The name does not matter.

Query—If a person is a member of a firm or corporation, can he hold that corporation or firm responsible for an injury while in its employ?

Answer—Anyone on the firm's payroll is entitled to compensation.

Query—If an employer sends a man to do a certain piece of work without any specified price or contract, who is responsible in case of an injury, the contractor or the party having the work done?

Answer—The contractor.

Query—If a man loses an ear and does not lay off work, is he entitled to compensation?

Answer—He is not. He is only entitled to compensation if the accident unfits him for work.

Query—A boy is employed by the week. He must go to school eight hours a day. Is he in my employ and am I liable while he is in school?

Answer—You are not liable while he is in school.

WITH THE EDITOR

I call attention to an article in this issue by F. B. Connolly, president of the National Retail Grocers' Association, on the profits made by retailers on staple package goods. Mr. Connolly sets forth a list of products which he says are typical and which he shows yield the retailers a margin of usually less than the actual expense of doing business. Mr. Connolly says that 60 per cent. of the grocer's business are goods of this type, and that this is the main reason why so many grocers fail.

I agree with all that Mr. Connolly says. It cannot be even questioned that between the wholesale price of many package goods and the average retail price, there is much less than the 17 per cent. which it costs to do business in the average retail store. If Mr. Connolly's statement that 60 per cent. of the retail business is in this class is correct, it follows that 40 per cent. is carrying the whole load. Naturally the profits which must be made on the 40 per cent. are exorbitant.

But there is something to be said about Mr. Connolly's suggestion that the manufacturer ought to allow the retailer a larger percentage, which I take it means reducing the wholesale price. In isolated cases this would serve, but in many cases, probably the most, it would have no effect whatever. I think I said last week, in answer to a correspondent, that the manufacturer's chief trouble was to get retailers to keep their profits in their own pockets. If the manufacturer of Lea & Perrin's sauce, which pays gross only 13⅓ per cent., should cut the wholesale price so that the gross profit would be twice 13⅓ per cent., hundreds of retailers would at once cut their retail price accordingly. And their competitors would instantly feel themselves obliged to follow.

If we could have some law that would compel the retailer not to cut below a price which is profitable to him, we would have this situation cured at once. Somebody says the Stevens bill would do this, but it would not. It would compel every retailer to sell at a fixed price regardless of what is profitable to him. That is very far from being the same thing.

The opinion rendered to the Pennsylvania Dairy and Food Commissioner by Deputy Attorney General Hargest, and published in another column, is just as important to the food situation in other States as to the food situation in Pennsylvania, for the same question is present everywhere, viz., whether a piece of package food which complies with the Federal Food and Drugs Act, and which is shipped from one State into another, can be attacked by the food authorities of the State of destination, if found to violate the food laws of such State.

The Blue Label Catsup Opinion.

The question has arisen in connection with Blue Label Catsup, manufactured by Curtice Bros., of Rochester, N. Y. Curtice Bros. say that Blue Label Catsup complies with the Federal food act, and, since it is interstate commerce, that is enough. Even if it violates the food law of some State into which it is shipped—although they deny that it violates in any way the Pennsylvania law—such State cannot interfere with its sale. The Pennsylvania Attorney General's department says in the opinion published elsewhere that it can.

While the question is a rather technical one, perhaps something interesting about it can be presented here. Several months ago a retailer named McDermott, living in Oregon, Wis., bought some Karo syrup from a Chicago jobber. The syrup was labeled in accordance with the Federal food act. Wisconsin had a State food law requiring the printing of certain words, and nothing else, upon the labels of package food products. To comply with this law Karo syrup would have had to destroy all the wording which the Federal food act required the label to bear. The court said that no State had the right to pass such a law, for the label required by the Federal act was often all the evidence which the Government has as to whether the Federal act has been complied with, and the Government was entitled to examine that evidence, and act upon it, even after the original package had been opened and the bottles or cans put on the retailer's shelves.

They therefore set aside the Wisconsin State food law as an unwarranted interference with interstate commerce.

This decision, it has been argued by certain manufacturers, divests the State of all power to interfere with the sale of a product, even though in direct violation of its food law provided it complies with the Federal food act. I have always believed that this was not the intention of the court, and that the law was still that package food shipped into the State in a large outside container, became direct subject to the State food law as soon as the retail packages were moved. The Pennsylvania Attorney General's Department agrees with this and will take that position in the enforcement of the Pennsylvania law. Almost certainly a State court, naturally jealous of the dignity of its own State laws, would take the same view. There are thousands of decisions of United States District Courts which do not agree with this view, but no Supreme Court decision as yet.

Curtice Bros., the manufacturer involved, deny that the quality or legality of their product is questioned or affected by the controversy. They say that Blue Label catsup conforms with the Pennsylvania law, and that the only question in the case is what is an original package.

I confess I do not think much of the argument which the Associated Advertisers' Clubs of America are making to Federal Trade Commission, that false advertising is "unfair competition" and should therefore be prosecuted by the Commission. Of course in a sense unfair competition; so are certain

Unintelligent Grocery Advertising From a Consumer's Standpoint

Philadelphia, November 20, 1915.

Mr. Elton J. Buckley, Esq.,
"Modern Merchant and Grocery World," 927 Arch Street, Philadelphia, Pa.

Dear Mr. Buckley:—I wonder whether there is any way in which you can bring home to grocers and small dealers of various kinds, as well as the chain stores, the senseless waste of money and the unnecessary antagonism of many dwellers in residential districts of the city by the littering up of porches with handbills, posters, cards, etc. The indiscriminate distribution of advertising matter in this way is contrary to city ordinance and is the principal contributing factor to the unsightliness of many of our streets.

In my own case a feeling of resentment exists against a dealer whose cards, posters or papers are thrown on my porch, especially in view of the fact that it is the common practice of the distributors to walk across grass plots and step over hedges and in many other ways trespass on private property in an injurious manner. I had a recent example when the cards and bills were thrown upon freshly painted porches along nearly a whole square where I live, 4912 Walnut street, although each one had a bar up and a notice of "fresh paint."

If the psychology of advertising teaches that the recipient of the message should be approached in such a manner as to please him, then this method of reaching the public unquestionably does more harm than good, for it creates more antagonism than it brings customers.

If you could, in your forceful manner, emphasize some of these facts in one of your editorials, I feel that it would do much good.

Very truly yours,
CHARLES H. LAWALL.

Everything that the well known Pennsylvania State Chemist says here is true. Such advertising as he describes not only never got a customer, but it might easily keep a possible customer away. The trouble is in the calibre of the people who are usually hired to distribute circular advertising.

ns of price-cutting, but neither in my judgment the kind of un-competition which the law ns. This is a very circuitous ineffective method of reaching dishonest advertiser. Even if ally sound it could only reach ad-ising that was done between es. The way to scotch a dis-est advertiser in New Jersey, instance, is to have the New Jersey Legislature pass an honest ertising law, and then have that enforced. Pennsylvania has a d advertising law, but nobody ns to be interested enough to orce it. Let the advertising men a little work themselves.

Aluminum Advertising Company of May-wood, Ill., Kicked Out of Court

Has Shady Premium Scheme, With Promissory Notes in it, Which This Journal Recently Exposed. Brings a Case on Retailer's Promissory Notes But Loses After Fraud is Shown.

In a recent issue this paper said some uncomplimentary things about the advertising scheme of the "Aluminum Advertising Co.," of Maywood, Ill. This is another of the concerns that take notes from retailers and at once pass them on to third persons, who demand pay-ment, and can usually collect. In a case just decided in Minnesota, however, the scheme was thrown out of court.

The grocer in the Minnesota case was W. H. Ivey, of St. Paul, who fell a victim to the scheme and agreed to pay $2 each for a number of pieces of aluminum ware on the agreement that the company would send agents out among the store's customers to work up new custom-ers. Mr. Ivey confidingly gave notes for $300, which the company promptly transferred to one H. H.

Mansfield. The Advertising Co. defaulted in its agreement, and Mr. Ivey decided he wouldn't pay the notes. Suit was begun by Mansfield, however, who appeared in court ready to plead the usual rule that no matter what defense Mr. Ivey had against the Aluminum Co. it was not good against him. Mr. Ivey proved, however, that Mansfield was a brother-in-law of the presi-dent of the Aluminum concern, thus showing how these schemers work. The court then let in Ivey's defense, and he had the schemers out of court in a very few minutes.

During the suit Mr. Ivey proved that the "orders" turned into the grocer were false, the solicitors for the company evidently copying the names of people residing in his neighborhood from the mail boxes and directories in the flats and writing them on the cards which were turned in to Ivey as bona fide or-ders. Many witnesses were brought in who testified that they had never even seen a solicitor for the con-cern and had not signed a paper of any kind agreeing to trade at Ivey's store, although their names appeared on the cards given to Ivey.

Mr. Ivey testified that the Alum-inum Co. had agreed to secure him 150 new customers provided he would buy 150 pieces of aluminum at $2 each.

No More Sunday Meat Selling in Montgomery, Ala.

The city authorities of Montgomery, Ala., have ruled against a petition to permit the opening of retail meat shops in that city on Sunday from 4 to 9 A. M. The plea was made that, on ac-count of the warm climate and lack of refrigeration in many cases, it would be a convenience, if not a necessity, to per-mit this Sunday morning opening. Re-tail meat dealers appeared in a body to protest against the opening order. If it was permitted all would have to open, as competition would compel it. No re-tailer wanted to open his shop on Sun-day, unless compelled to do so to pre-vent loss of trade. The City Commis-sioners by a unanimous vote denied the Sunday opening petition. Fortunately, Sunday closing is now more the rule than the exception.

The Eighty Per Cent. Insurance Clause.

To the Editor.

Dear Sir:—Will you kindly state your objection to the 80 per cent. clause. There is such a vast difference in the rates. The flat rate of insurance is $10.50 per $1,000, and with the 80 per cent. clause is $6.50 per $1,000. Now we can carry 90 per cent. of our stock insured for less money with the 80 per cent. clause than if we would have only 50 per cent. insured at the flat rate. Until you give us the full meaning of the 80 per cent. clause, our understanding of it is that we must at all times carry insurance for not less than 80 per cent. of our stock, that is if we have $100,000 stock we would not be allowed to carry less than $80,000 insurance on it, but we could carry $90,000 or $95,000, but if we would carry less than $80,000 in case of a total loss we would not get even the full of our policies, that we would become co-insurers with the company. Will you please advise us if our interpretation of the clause is correct and if you advise against the 80 per cent. clause if we keep at all times above the 80 per cent. marks. Please do not publish our name whenever you put anything in your journal.

Thanking you for your reply, we are,

Yours very truly,

This correspondent has been sent a recent copy of the "Modern Merchant and Grocery World" containing an article in the Legal Department on the 80 per cent. insurance clause, explaining its meaning and showing how it works out. In a nutshell, the objection to taking insurance under the 80 per cent. clause is that it may cut down the amount you can get on a fire loss. The only safe insurance in our judgment is full insurance.

The Grocers' Encyclopedia.

Baltimore, Md., Nov. 23, 1915.

To the Editor.

Dear Sir:—Can you advise us the name of the publisher of the "Grocers' Encyclopedia?" We are anxious to secure a copy of this and would appreciate it if you will let us know where we might secure it, and also, as above stated, the name of the publisher.

Yours very truly,

Information Wanted.

Philadelphia, Pa.,

November 22, 1915.

To the Editor.

Dear Sir:—I am most desirous of getting in touch with some journal or book which treats of the grocery business in detail. I want, if possible, a personal knowledge of all the staple articles in the grocery business—a book that will give some description of the articles, how the goods are handled, what they contain, where the raw goods are grown and a general description of the things we use every day. Also I am desirous that this book give a good description of tea and coffee, the different kinds, where they are grown, the names of such and how to mix and blend them. I am in the grocery business and have been in it for a number of years. I was a subscriber to the "Modern Merchant and Grocery World" for a considerable time but am not presently, but may be again. I write for this information because I feel that you will be able to direct me and that the information given by you will be dependable.

Thanking you in the anticipation of an early reply. I neglected to say at the proper time that I would like this book to deal with window dressing also.

Very sincerely yours,

JAMES HARTIN.

There is no book or publication which deals with all these subjects. The Grocers' Encyclopedia, published by Artemas Ward, 50 Union Square, New York, price $10, will give you all the information you ask for about goods sold in grocery stores. You can get hints on window dressing from this paper, from other trade papers, and particularly from "Merchants' Record and Show Window," 430 S. Dearborn street Chicago.

Want Fraudulent Advertising Declared to Be Unfair Competition.

The Associated Advertising Clubs America are asking the Federal Trade Commission to censor fraudulent and deceptive advertising, on the ground that it constitutes "unfair competition" under the Federal Trade Commission act. Representatives of the clubs appeared before the Commission in Washington last Tuesday and made an argument. At the conclusion of the testimony Chairman Davies, of the Commission, announced that any one who chose could bring a complaint to the Commission of unfair trade practices alleged to have been worked through false advertising and that it would receive due consideration. If it is found that the matter complained of concerns the welfare of the public, the Commission will undertake a formal proceeding against the person or corporation complained against.

Weekly Window Display Suggestions

Mince Meat Display.

Yellow is a good color contrast for our mince meat display. Use it as a floor covering. Fill as many glass jars with mince meat as you have ground of mince meat and set each on white paper napkins, with price tags in front of each jar. Set buckets of mince meat on upturned bushel baskets, first covering the baskets with a full skirt of the yellow paper. A band of paper at the rear finishes this easy display. Sell right from the buckets in the window and thus save store space inside.

To the Retailer Who Never Signs a Specialty Order

Occasionally you find a retailer who will give a specialty order, but "makes it a rule never to sign it." We submit this is a mistake. Don't you see how easy it is, if the salesman is dishonest, to put through a bogus order on you, with any jobber who knows of your rule not to sign orders?

Isn't it a safer plan to sign such specialty orders as you decide to give, but decide to give only those which bear one or the other of the above stamps? The stamp is absolute insurance of fair and square dealing.

The New York Letter

American Fair Trade League Begins Investigation Into Premiums. New American Specialty Manufacturers' Association Officers. Department Stores Come Out for Stevens Bill.

New York, November 26, 1915.

The American Fair Trade League has appointed a committee to investigate the trading stamp and coupon question and Dr. Lee Galloway, Professor of Commerce and Industry at the New York University, has been made chairman. A list of questions has been sent out to a large number of retailers. They are phrased in a way which indicates that the real object is to gain unbiased information and not to attack without reason. The list of questions is as follows:—

1. Are you using, or have you ever used, "trading stamps" (or similar devices) in your business? (b) For how long? (c) From whom did you or do you buy them? (d) At what price per thousand? (e) What induced you to buy them—did you do so voluntarily or because of your competitors' use of them?

2. Have they increased your business? (b) If so, to how large an extent has the growth of your business been due to their use? (c) Does their use cause a sufficient increase in business so that their cost may properly be said to be paid out of profits on additional sales? (d) In calculating results from their use do you charge against them the additional expense on the business which you naturally would have done without their use and which would therefore have been avoided?

3. What per cent. of total selling expense are they? (b) Do they displace other forms of expense? (c) If so, what?

4. Do you think money spent for them could be used in other ways, such as newspaper or circular advertising more profitably?

5. What is the actual cost of "stamps" or (similar devices) usually given with each dollar's purchase of merchandise? (b) What, in your experience or opinion, is the actual average retail value of the merchandise or "premiums" received by the consumer on each dollar's purchase of merchandise? (c) In your opinion, does the use of "stamps" (or similar devices) tend to confuse the consumer's mind as to merchandise values? (d) Is their use, in your opinion, a form of price cutting?

6. Are they given on all purchases or is their use confined to cash sales?

7. Are double or triple amounts given to attract business during slack periods, such as morning hours, etc.? (b) What is your experience with such use of them as a means of avoiding congestion in rush hours. (c) In your opinion, when so used are they, in effect, a form of price cutting which tends, more than their regular use, to confuse the consumer's mind as to actual merchandise values?

8. Does their use tend to draw away the attention of the consumer from the quality and price of the goods to the securing of premiums?

9. Does their use create a permanent patronage which would continue to come to the dealer, if he should stop giving them? (b) Does their use attract a lower class of customers and repel the better class? (c) Is the customer willing to pay higher prices for merchandise when they are given?

10. What proportion of your competitors use them? (b) Do they create new business by stimulating increased consumption, or do they simply tend to draw business from one store to another? (c) In your experience does a dealer who uses them have any advantage over a competitor who also uses them. (d) If so, why?

11. Does their use cheapen goods in the eyes of the consumer by creating the belief that they cannot be sold for the price asked but require "stamps" (or similar devices) to sell them? (b) Is it true that "trading stamps" (or similar devices) increase the dealer's reputation for giving good value? (c) What percentage of customers do you think save them?

12. If you formerly used them and no longer do so, please state as fully as possible your reason for discontinuing them. Please be specific.

The American Specialty Manufacturers' Association elected Carl A. Lautz, of Lautz Brothers Co., Buffalo, N. Y., president. There was no competition and the election was unanimous. The first vice-president is E. M. Alexander, of the Foulds Milling Co.; second vice-president, R. R. Moore, of the Diamond Crystal Salt Co.; third vice-president, W. L. Sweet, Rumford Chemical Co.; secretary, H. F. Thunhurst; treasurer, Victor Garrett. The following were elected directors for three years: W. B. Cherry, Fred. Mason, C. M. Rich, S. H. Small.

The convention was very successful, the attendance being noticeably large.

The Appellate Division during the week by a vote of 3 to 2 decided that the Bradstreet Company is liable to its subscribers for damages sustained when misleading information is furnished to them by the company. The case is of importance to every business concern in the country that depends upon commercial agencies for information concerning the credit of customers.

The case was that of Alexander J. Munro, a fur dealer, who suffered a loss of $1,050 for furs delivered to the firm of Jackson & Sulzer, of 27 West 26th street. Jackson & Sulzer are now petitioned into bankruptcy. Information concerning the firm was supplied by the Bradstreet Company and, depending upon this, Munro extended credit to Jackson & Sulzer.

The National Retail Dry Goods Association has given out during the week a number of letters received from manufacturers opposing the Stevens bill, which is now pending in Congress, and which would give the manufacturer the right to fix the retail price at which his products shall be sold. One of them is from R. G. Munn & Bros., of Boston, and reads as follows:—

We should not favor any curtailment of the liberty of the retailer. We have never tried to control the retail price on any of our products and should not unless we found someone making a football of it, in which case we would see that they did not get our goods. It looks to me like another phase of the protection theory, in which the consumer is always the loser.

It is regarded as remarkable that during the last few days two of the large department stores of this city have come out in favor of the Stevens bill. One is B. Altman & Co. and the other is Bloomingdale's. Mr. Bloomingdale gave out an interview in which he thus stated his position:—

I am opposed to price cutting in the case of copyrighted, patented or proprietary goods, because it is an old-fashioned method of unfair competition. Modern principles of merchandising are based chiefly on advantageous buying, the keeping of large stocks and the rendering of efficient service to customers. These factors control in competition between stores, and mere price cutting of articles of standard price for the purpose of drawing away trade from competitors by creating the impression that all other articles are likewise sold at lower prices, strikes me as not only a decidedly unfair method of competition, but also as a practice unworthy of modern business.

SUMMARIZED MARKET CONDITIONS.

Tea fairly steady, but practical unchanged in price; demand moderate.—Coffee quiet; demand light. Prices about steady for the week. Undertone has been heavy but closes week slightly improved.

Selling Talks With Clerks

BY A MAN WHO HAS BEEN ONE

Conducted by W. E. SWEENEY, Manager for L. Lehman & Co.'s Department Food Store, Dover, N. J.

Be Brother Workers.—Did you ever stop to consider this fact—that you lose your self-respect when you hinder or hurt the good efforts of your fellow clerk?

It's rather doubtful whether every knock is a boost. Constant criticism of another simply displays a bitter mind without aiding any one. It shows that by talking behind his back you are a coward.

If it's a case of jealousy there is one way to overcome it, and that is to buckle in and be as good a man as he is.

Fellows aren't promoted, nor is their pay raised, because of the dear, sweet, tender affection that exists between them and the boss.

Bosses aren't constructed on those lines, but they are very efficiently constructed on observation lines, so much so that we all generally get about what is coming to us.

That being the case, isn't it silly to corrupt our minds with jealous thoughts—thoughts of envy and, even at times, malice?

Be brother workers, and if there is one among you bigger than the rest, be thankful for a living example under your own eyes, instead of reading about that example in a book. Copy him. Get inspiration and enthusiasm and knowledge from him while he's around, because some man will come along some day and say, "This job is too small for you, I'll show you a bigger one."

No, you musn't try to get the ahead chap down to your level, you must try to get up to his, or if you haven't any one to get up to, form an ideal of your own.

Each one of us has at some time in our career met or read of a successful merchant whose life and whose principles we greatly admired and whose principles won for him honor and success.

Take him as yours, because, boys, you may put it down for a real, hard fact that no lasting success can be acquired unless we live and act the true life, and the true life is honesty, sobriety, industry, fidelity.

Raw sugar has declined to around 5 cents, but refined is unchanged and quiet. Situation very uncertain.—Canned tomatoes strong but unchanged for the week. Other food goods steady and quiet.—Prices somewhat easier, mainly because prices have been so high. Other dried fruits unchanged. Apricots strong.—Peaches strong on account of heavy foreign demand.—Wheat quiet and irregular.—Flour unchanged but steady to firm.

Eastern markets from 5.40 to 5.55, which is an unusually large percentage below the price of the ordinary refined sugar. If raw sugar keeps where it is, refined will probably decline, but as to just when this will happen, predictions vary. The consumptive demand for sugar is very poor.

Later.—On Friday several refiners dropped to 5.95.

Syrup and Molasses.

Glucose remains unchanged for the week. The corn market is weaker, however, on account of large crop reports, and is expected to decline. If it does decline glucose will probably decline with it. Compound syrup is unchanged and in fair demand. Sugar syrup unchanged and very quiet. Molasses situation is firm and high, fine grades of molasses being about 5 cents above normal.

Fish.

The mackerel market seems not to improve. There is some new Norway mackerel available on this side on account of receipts in New York, but as the quality is not very good, prices are weaker. Prices for the spot stock still remaining in this country continue high. Shore mackerel is offered with a fair degree of freedom at full prices. Cod, hake and haddock are quoted to some extent at unchanged prices. Salmon shows no change and is quiet, as is usual at this season. Domestic sardines unchanged and dull. Imported sardines are as they have been for some time—very scarce and very high.

Canned Goods.

The tomato market is unchanged but stronger; demand fair; prospects of a gradual advance through the season. Corn is in good demand at full prices. Peas are selling well, especially for the lower grades. The reasonable prices have largely increased the consumption. Baltimore packings of various lines are unchanged and are having the usual demand for this season. No change in California canned fruits.

Beans and Peas.

The pea bean market is much stronger owing to lack of supplies. An advance of 10 cents per bushel is noted for the week. Marrows and red kidneys are still very strong at the prevailing high prices. Green and Scotch peas have advanced about 10 cents a bushel this

The Grocery Markets

Tea.

The tea market shows no change for the week. Everything is steady and in fairly active demand. Prices are getting scarcer and the market is hardening. The consumptive demand for tea is fair.

Coffee.

The coffee market shows no change for the week. The situation is still heavy and prices are rather firm than otherwise. Rio 7s are about as they were a week ago; the situation is relatively stronger on Rio than on Santos 4s because Santos 4s are scarcer. Santos 4s are unchanged also. Mild coffee prices are in dull demand but fairly well maintained because of light supply. Mocha is perhaps a shade lower than it has been. The demand for that and for Java is fair.

Sugar.

The sugar market is difficult to appraise. All refiners are asking 6 cents for granulated and there is no immediate indication of any change in this price, but raws have declined and are quoted as the week ends at 4.77, which is a decline of at least $\frac{1}{4}$ from the price ruling a week ago. Another weakening influence is the fact that domestic beet granulated can be bought in

Run over your stock and see how large a percentage of it is nationally advertised goods, and how they sell compared with the others. Then reflect on whether you would be satisfied to throw out all the nationally advertised brands and replace them with unknown brands.

If your conclusions on these questions are what we expect them to be, decide further whether nationally advertised goods aren't worth your very best and strongest effort.

week. Lima beans are selling freely and an advance of 7½ cents a hundred is noted for the week.

Dried Fruits.

California dried fruits are without feature. Peaches are maintaining their advance, while apricots are almost entirely cleaned up in first hands. Prunes are selling freely at full prices. Raisins and currants are in active demand at full prices.

Butter.

The butter market is active with a very good consumptive demand at prices ranging about 1 to 2 cents over a week ago. The make of butter has fallen off to a considerable extent and everything is selling on arrival. The market is in a healthy condition at the advance, but no further change in price is looked for in the immediate future.

Eggs.

Fresh eggs continue to be very scarce, and the market is firm on the present basis of quotations. The average quality of new laid eggs is good and the market is likely to remain unchanged until there is an increase in the receipts, which is unlikely for the month at least.

Cheese.

The cheese market is firm with an active demand both for consumption and export, at prices ranging about a half cent over a week ago. The market is in a healthy condition, but no further advance in the near future is expected.

Provisions.

Everything in the smoked meat line is very firm with an active demand at prices ranging about the same as last week. The supply is reported to be short, but there is likely to be an increase in the supply in the near future, with a possible declining market. Both pure and compound lard are in good demand at prices ranging about the same as last week. Barreled pork, dried beef and canned meats are unchanged with a moderate consumptive demand.

Poultry.

Turkeys have been very scarce and everything is cleaning up, with fine turkeys selling in a wholesale way at 30 cents per pound. The average quality, not quite fancy, are selling at from 26 to 28 cents. The supply of fowls and chickens has been ample, selling at from 20 to 22 cents. Ducks and geese are in fair supply, selling at about 20 cents. There is likely to be a lower price after the holiday demand.

INDIVIDUAL MARKET REPORTS.

Spices.

The market continues quite active. Prices are considerably higher. Foreign shippers are rather reluctant to sell at this time, except in a small way. The situation as to freights is more critical than ever before.

Pepper.—Has been exceedingly active this week. Prices generally are higher. It is now definitely reported that the crop of Lampong is far short of normal.

Cloves.—Spot prices are high and there is great uncertainty as to future arrivals. This article is likely to remain high for some time.

Nutmegs.—All grades are in small supply, and prices are slowly but steadily advancing.

Pimento (Allspice).—In fair demand at generally firmer prices. In fact, the price to-day is 1 cent per pound higher than prices in effect during early fall.

Gingers.—All grades in fair demand, though Jamaica is the only root that has changed in price during the week.

Tapiocas.—Much firmer, due no doubt to the higher freights on this article.

Paprikas.—Hungarian is out of stock. Spanish grades all in fair demand at generally unchanged prices.

Cassias.—Saigon extremely scarce and higher for arrival. Batavia grades in good demand. China grades are in reduced supply at firm prices.

Seeds, Herbs, Etc.—All articles in the line are generally firm, with fair demand. Mustard is likely to go higher. Cummin, caraway and canary unchanged. Poppy is higher. Herbs in active demand at present.

National President Connolly Calls for Better Retail Profits on Package Goods

Produces List of Staple Goods on All of Which He Claims Retailers Get Too Small a Margin.

I wish to emphasize the fact that no article selling at retail for 10 cents should cost the retailer more than 90 cents a dozen. A 12½-cent article should not cost more than $1.10 and a 15-cent article not more than $1.35. A 25-cent seller should not cost more than $2.25. This will allow us a profit of 25 per cent. on the selling price, a small margin over the cost of doing business.

It is a well-known fact that 60 per cent. of the goods sold by the retail grocer to-day are sold at a loss when the cost of doing business is added to the cost of the goods. In order to demonstrate the inadequate profit we are now receiving, and with a hope that the manufacturer will put forth some effort to assist in bettering this condition, I herewith quote the cost and selling price and percentage of profit of the articles, properly based on the selling price, that constituted a large part of the sales of a San Francisco, Cal., store on Friday, November 12th:—

From the above it can easily be seen why Bradstreet's report has shown that 75 per cent. of the retail grocers are failures within a period of fifteen years—20 per cent. out an existence and 5 per cent. make money.

It is time, Mr. Manufacturer, that you take more interest in the welfare of your retail distributor and find some solution of this problem, to the end that your individual products shall carry their own cost of distribution and it will not be necessary for the retailer to make teas, coffees and fancy groceries pay the losses sustained in distributing your goods.

The Quaker Oats Company

Whiskers Forever.

Well, brothers of the red shirt, the time has come for us to strike a fierce blow for freedom. Listen here.

One day last month I was in the office of an old pal of mine who is the manager of a big Philadelphia grocery store. Him and I came from the same town in Africa and we've always sort of hung together. When I got short I'd borrow money of him, and then again when he had more coin than I had he'd lend me some. It's been a lovely friendship. I believe he'd give me a job in his store to-day if he couldn't get anybody else.

Well, anyway, when I was in there last month I had to wait while he talked with a fellow who wanted a counter job. The store had put an ad. in for a clerk and this man was one of the 3,643,277 who had answered. He was a chap about forty, and talked like he knew the business. He sounded to me as if he was one of those fellows that come over here from the north of Ireland. They make crackajack clerks.

He had a bunch of brown whiskers on him that looked like they would have come off, if they'd been on me.

My friend the manager talked with him awhile, took his name and address and said he'd write him.

I was in there last week again.

"By the way, did you hire that chap with the whiskers who was here that day I was in?" I asked.

"No, I didn't take him?"

"Why not? What I heard sounded like he was a good man."

"I guess he was, but I didn't like his whiskers. I don't believe grocery clerks ought to wear whiskers. I prefer smooth-faced men."

And right there's the call to war. The right to wear whiskers or whiskerettes if we want to, that's the point. I'll wade through three buckets of blood myself to save that God-given right. Understand, I don't wear 'em. To tell you the honest truth, I couldn't. For some darn fool reason, my whiskers only grow on one side. If I was to wear 'em, I'd be a two-faced gent for sure. But all the same I've got the right to do it if I want to, and I ain't going to have any man saying to me he won't give me a job as long as I have whiskers. I ain't a going to stand for it, that's all there is to it, and I start out tomorrow to get up a company of brave and determined heroes who will do and die with me.

The motto on our shield of battle's going to be "gimme whiskers or gimme death!" Speaking now entirely confidential, I'd just as soon have one as the other.

The next day after my friend the manager told me he'd turned down the man with whiskers, I called on a customer of mine that I know pretty well. He buys quite a lot of stuff from me and the house thinks well of him. He wears whiskers too and always has.

"Jim," I said, "my people are talking about not selling you any more goods."

He looked at me right sharp for a minute, but I had my face all set like George Washington's.

"Am I supposed to bite on something?" he said. "All right, I will; why not?"

"On account of those spinach of yours," I said. "There's a great movement against whiskers in the grocery business. They think they're bad things to have around a grocery store, and I heard just before I left Philly that some of 'em thought your whiskers had something to do with the war. The hand of the world is agin 'em, and my house feels that they'll have to go along. It's down with whiskers from to-day on. Will you cut yours off?"

"I'll cut my whiskers off the day you cut your head off," he said.

Which was a sort of a mean answer, I thought. I reproved him for it gently but firmly and left.

Now who'll join the army? It's a grand old cause. We'd make a scrumptuous sight marching down Broad street, Philadelphia, with our whiskers a-flying in the breeze. That's a little bit exaggerated, for they won't fly in the breeze. When we parade it's going to be a rule that every man wears his in a net.

Any woman who has whiskers can join if they ain't red. I'd rather meet the devil himself than a woman with red whiskers. Fact is, she looks like the devil.

Now, don't you boys get me wrong here. There is whiskers and there is whiskers. I ain't for all kinds—some whiskers I wouldn't let come in my house. Why my old boss, that I learned the grocery business of, had a brother with a bunch of rubbish like I'm talking about now. They looked like one of these dusters you clean off automobiles with—looked like one that had been used a good bit. He hadn't cut 'em since Jackson was elected and he'd rather have died than do it. Why when his wife used to lose anything small she'd look first in the old man's whiskers for it. Time and time again she'd find it there. One day I remember she found a couple of spools and scared out a little chippy bird that was just getting ready to put up a nest. I'm agin the kind of whiskers you have to send to an upholsterer once a year to get renovated. Real gent's whiskers are the kind I'm for—the kind I'd raise if I could raise any.

THE STROLLER.

California to Go Into the Food Business.

California has undertaken State distribution of the food supply. The Governor not long ago signed a bill creating a "State Commission Market" to deal directly between producers and consumers of food of all kinds, the object being to eliminate middlemen. The law is unusually clear and explains itself the following clauses:—

Section 1. There is hereby created the State commission market, a State organization to carry on the business of receiving from the producers thereof, the agricultural fishery, dairy and farm products of the State of California, and the selling and disposing of the same on commission, as herein provided.

Sec. 2. The State commission market shall be under the management and control of a governing body of one person, to be known as the State commission market director, who shall be appointed by the Governor of the State of California.

Sec. 3. The commission market director shall establish and maintain in any and all cities and towns in the State, where and when the conditions are, in his judgment most suitable, depots or stations to be used as commission markets, for the receiving, care, sale and distribution of the agricultural, fishery, dairy and farm products of California, and the director shall establish and maintain an executive office or headquarters at Sacramento.

Sec. 4. The commission market director shall make all necessary rules and regulations and change the same when necessary, for the operation and carrying on of the State commission market, and shall print the rules for free distribution to all parties who wish to avail themselves of the privileges of the market, whether buyers or sellers, and all buyers and sellers shall conform to such rules and regulations in order to claim any right under this act.

Sec. 5. All producers of agricultural, dairy or farm products, products manufactured or processed therefrom, or fishery products which shall have been grown, raised, produced, processed or manufactured within the State of California, or caught in the territorial waters thereof, shall have the right to consign and deliver such products to the State commission market, any of its depots or branches, for sale and distribution.

Sec. 6. The State commission market shall receive and care for all produce consigned and deliver to it under the provisions of this act, and shall sell and distribute to dealers, consumers and all buyers such products to the best possible advantage of the producer; and, in the end that the State commission market be self-supporting, shall charge a commission for the handling of all products in an amount which, in the judgment of the director, is just and reasonable. Settlements with producers shall be made once a month or oftener, and the market shall retain the commission charged.

Sec. 7. The director shall have power to rent, lease, occupy or use all such lands and buildings may be needed in the business of the market or any of its branches, and may provide the same with sufficient force of officers, clerks and other employees, as may be deemed necessary to carry out the provisions of this act, and shall rent or purchase and use all equipment, appliances, horses, mules, trucks, wagons, and all supplies necessary for the carrying on of said business.

Do You Sell All the Rice You Could?

SOME people will always buy something new—it rests with the article whether they keep on buying it.

If you will show Imperator rice, which is different from the rice your customers may be used to, in that it is not coated with glucose and talc, a lot of them will buy it just because it is new to them. When they taste the difference between Imperator and ordinary rice they will keep on buying it.

It's a way to better rice sales.

No. 339.—Important to Every One Who Ships or Receives Freight.

I have just been reading a number of recently decided railroad cases, and it occurs to me that the business man who receives freight, very often in his dealings with railroads, gets the little end of the stick. He would not always be in this position if he knew how to protect himself when a crisis arises, but usually he does not. I have in mind two cases which are typical of a considerable number, and will discuss them briefly. Both involve a situation which may cause a freight receiver loss unless he knows what to do to avoid it. Both have to do with the liability of a receiver of goods by freight to pay the freight, under conditions when in all fairness he ought not to pay it at all. In the first case a Florida fruit grower contracted to ship to a Pittsburgh fruit house a car of watermelons. The contract was very clear—the melons were to weigh not less than 35 pounds each, and a certain price was made based on the size. The freight charges to be collected at destination.

When the car arrived at Pittsburgh the buyer inspected the contents, and found that instead of 35-pound melons, the shipper had sent him 25-pound melons, which were naturally worth considerably less, and for which the receiver had no market. If I remember rightly, the difference in the price of the two sizes was about 25 per cent. The smaller melons were a second instead of a first grade. For this reason the buyer rejected the whole car on the ground that the melons were not what he had ordered.

The railroad company sold the whole car at public sale and out of the proceeds paid itself for demurrage, track storage and freight (as far as the money would go). There still remained $134.37 unpaid on account of the freight, and the railroad sued the buyer of the melons for it. Now here is a case where it might appear, as a matter of common sense, as if the buyer was not responsible for the freight on goods which he had not ordered. Nevertheless, the court said he must pay. He appealed and the Appeal Court also said he must pay. I present here an extract from the decision of the court:—

The railroad's contention is that when the buyer, of these melons directed the grower to ship them a carload of melons they constituted the grower their agent to employ a carrier to deliver the melons to defendants at Pittsburgh, and by reason of such employment defendants became liable to the carrier for the freight and other charges. As a general proposition of law this contention is correct, at least where the defense is that the articles shipped were not of the grade ordered by the consignee, as claimed in this case. In such cases a delivery to the carriers is a delivery to the purchaser, and the receiver must look to the shipper for any defect in the articles or goods consigned. If an article entirely different from that ordered were shipped we would have before us a different question.

This being interpreted means that it was really the Pittsburgh man who employed the railroad, in Florida, to bring the melons to Pittsburgh. To be sure, he acted through an agent, the shipper, but it was still his act and because it was his act, he became responsible for the freight, regardless of whether the goods were exactly what he ordered. Thus does it come about that a man, after he has rejected goods which he did not order and did not want, is compelled to pay freight on them. To get his money back, he must go to Florida to sue, and then he may not find the shipper worth anything.

All this might have been avoided had he known what to do in the emergency that presented itself. Since the discrepancy in the melons was one of grade, rather than of kind, it would have been useful for him to know that he was responsible for the freight whether he took the melons in or not.

In order to secure himself, he should therefore have taken them in, always provided he had some chance of selling them for as large a sum as the freight amounted to. Naturally a man in the business has a better chance of turning over stuff than the railroad who puts it up at forced sale. When the shipper demanded payment, the receiver's reply would be: "The melons were not what I ordered, and I accepted them only to protect myself against the freight charges. The net amount coming to you from this sale is so much, for which check is enclosed."

Of course an even better way is to compel the shipper to pay the freight in advance, which is usually impracticable. If a shipper could be induced to pay the freight, however, there would be fewer rejections on account of goods not being up to specifications. The shipper would know that he must ship the right sort of goods to get his freight money back.

As the court points out, a different situation would present itself if by some mistake oranges had been shipped instead of melons. Here it could not be said that the Pittsburgh receiver had had anything to do with their shipment, either direct or through an agent; therefore he would not be liable for the freight.

The question, therefore, for every man who receives goods by freight to ask himself before he rejects a shipment is, "am I responsible for the freight here, and if I am, would it not be better to take the goods in to protect myself against freight charges?"

The other case which I am to discuss concerns a somewhat similar situation. This has been decided several times, all very recently. A shipper B goods on consignment, B being instructed to sell them, and after paying the freight and deducting his charges, to remit proceeds to A. B takes the goods from the railroad, pays the freight bill which the railroad presents, sells the goods and remits the proceeds to A. After all the money is out of his hands the railroad finds that its freight bill was for too small a sum, and presents a second bill for the difference. Of course the law requires that the full listed freight be paid, otherwise there would be discrimination among shippers—but it would appear as if the road, being at fault, should be compelled to sue against A, who had the money rather than against B, who was at fault, and who had no money in his hands to pay it from. Nevertheless, several courts have decided that B must pay, on the theory that the railroad was not obliged to deliver the goods to him or to any body, except upon his agreement to pay freight, which of course means the correct freight.

Naturally B can go after A to make him pay the second freight bill, but this is often very inconvenient.

The lesson here is that before consignee remits the proceeds of sale of consigned goods, he should insure himself by asking if the freight he has paid is the correct freight.

Question: George Bair, Philadelphia, Pa.—Two weeks ago a customer got me to cash a check for $12 which has since been returned by the bank with the statement that the account was closed before the check was given. The customer was a young man, and the check was that of his employer. What remedy have I?

Answer.—Giving a check on a bank where the maker knows there are no funds is a criminal offense. You can arrest the employer but not the employee who passed the check on you, for I assume you thought the check was good. You got the $12, however, and you therefore make him pay back the money. If there is any reason to believe that the employee knew the check was bad, you can arrest him also.

Enclosed find check for $3 one year's subscription. Am very much pleased to renew same and feel that I could not very well afford to be without it, as the advice alone is worth far more than the price of the magazine.—J. M. Sart, South Bethlehem, Pa.

Why a Manufacturer Should Be Permitted to Fix the Retail Price of His Product

Views of Various Believers in This Doctrine Who Offer Them as Arguments for the Pending Stevens Bill.

[The "Modern Merchant and Grocery World" has obtained and will from time to time present a series of statements by various well-known persons who believe that the manufacturer should have the right to tell the retailer what price he must get for the manufacturer's product. All of the views which will be presented can be taken as arguments for the pending Stevens Bill, which seeks to give a manufacturer that right.—Ed.]

9.—By Henry B. Joy, President Packard Motor Car Co., Detroit, Mich.

When prices are cut by unfair competitive methods who pays the absolutely the consumer is the one ultimately and continuously. One will fairly concede that a retailer must make a profit.

They make profits, of course, or they could not exist.

When a retail store sells an article below a proper profit or at cost, below cost, by reason of favoritism or desire to accommodate the customer in order to retain his trade, other lines, or to put a competing store out of business, or to run it as a leader for advertising purposes in order to attract customers for other goods at high prices, what does it mean?

It means simply that by sharp business that retailer to make his necessary average profit must and must, first, sell to the trusting customer, or inexperienced purchaser, in he can, that same article at less than its real worth; or, second, the retailer must and does sell other articles at more than their real worth. Naturally he probably does both.

There is no other answer; he must do so or fail.

So retailer or manufacturer desire to conduct his business along these lines.

Those who do are forced to do so by the unfair competition of other retailers or by manufacturers who do not protect their retail prices.

Business integrity and known prices have been inseparable companions.

Recent interpretations of the Sherman law now make it a criminal offense to conduct business on a one-price basis of equal treatment to all which representative business men have always been educated to believe was the highest moral plane upon which business can be conducted.

The Sherman law as interpreted makes it a crime to establish the price at which goods shall be resold if sold through retailers. But the courts agreed that it is no crime, moral or otherwise, and no offense against any existing laws to establish the price if the goods are sold through agents.

The manufacturer can see to it that equal treatment to all his patrons is accorded by selling the goods directly himself through his own chain of retail stores, if he is strong enough financially to establish such facilities, but he can not use the great channels of commerce, the wholesalers and retailers, even when it is the cheapest and most efficient method.

In its moral aspect, this distinction between good business and criminal business is not discernible to the lay mind.

It is a distinction without a difference.

Is it wise for the Government to devise and enforce regulations that tend to make us a nation of haggling, deceitful bargainers, and force into the retail business subterfuges and misrepresentation, thus putting a premium on sharp and unscrupulous practices, to the absolute harm of those very consumers the law should seek to protect, namely, the average consumer, unable to detect the deceptions being practiced upon him?

As the law now stands, corporations of the most sincere and earnest integrity are criticized for doing what has been believed to be the right thing in controlling and fixing retail prices. A published, printed retail price is a guide to the purchaser as to what he should pay, it is a guide to the retailer as to

The Road to Profitable Merchandising

Thousands of grocers know the advantage of selling advertised products the demand for which is firmly fixed. Good class of trade, steady sales, repeat orders, economy of selling, increased profits—these are the results.

National Biscuit Company advertising is backed up by the quality of the products. The consumer has confidence in them and knows them by name. Hence the grocer who handles them takes a short cut to profitable merchandising.

what he should ask, it is proof to the customer that the retailer is asking the fixed and fair price for the article. We see therefore that no book or publication or other branded article can properly be sold without the retail price marked on it, and yet the printing of the retail price is criticized by the Bureau of Corporations.

Only One Minute

If you'll take a minute to show Wheatena to a new customer and explain that it's the hearts of selected wheat and quite unlike any other cereal, you will probably never have to do anything with that customer again except fill her orders. That's Wheatena once it gets in. It's the most remarkable repeater in the market.

Also packed and guaranteed differently from any other cereal.

THE WHEATENA CO., Rahway, N. J.

was attended by about 400 leading merchants of the town. It was held at the new Hotel Fort Stanwick. James W. Leech, of Ebensburg, and John A. Scott, of Indiana, members of the Pennsylvania Workmen's Compensation Board, were honor guests and they fully explained this new and important law. H. M. Tarr, manager of the Johnstown Grocery Co., was also a speaker. H. G. Andrews acted as toastmaster. Paul N. Furman, Statistician of the Department of Labor, was also a guest and he fully explained the Child Labor Law. This event was a great credit to the association generally, and to Geo. McGarry, the efficient secretary, particularly.

Johnstown will hold a food show early in February.

Lock Haven Association is making great progress. At a recent meeting a merger with the local Board of Trade was effected. The association assumes all assets and liabilities and will be known as the Lock Haven Business Men's Association. Real estate to the amount of $800 passes to the new organization. Under the new charter the work of the organization will be broadened and it will have a better opportunity to develop the commercial and civic welfare.

A Farm Bureau is about to be established, and plans have already been made to provide for the expense.

A new industry has just been secured that will give employment to about 100 persons. An extension of the boulevard lighting system is being agitated. Yes, Lock Haven is on the map. Very much so.

Mr. Smedley was the guest of the Hazelton grocers on November 15th. He received a royal reception and was greeted by a large attendance. Lunch was served at the conclusion of the meeting. Hazelton has a good association of grocers, made up of good men. There are many evils menacing this town that it is hoped this organization can cure.

Mr. Smedley visited Freeland merchants on November 15th in an effort to revive the association at this place.

A rousing meeting of the Bethlehem Association was held on November 16th. It was well attended and was inspiring. This association has been making a great gain in membership and is planning for big things. Mr. Smedley made an address and he was followed by President Parker, Secretary Best, Mr. Stauffer, of J. A. Eherts & Co.; Mr. Huff, Thomas Semmell, A. C. Young and others. Lunch was served. It was a good meeting and we believe will mark the beginning of big things for "Busy Bethlehem."

Mr. Smedley visited Pittston on November 17th and spoke at a meeting of merchants held in the Auditorium of the Y. M. C. A. Building. A feature of the meeting was the awarding of the prizes in a window dressing contest which had just closed. There were 30 participants and the prizes were four scholarships in the I.C. Schools of Scranton. Prizes were awarded as follows: Class A, dry goods, etc., the Fowler Dry Goods Co. Class B, jewelry, etc., Harry Yaseen. Class C, furniture, the Hazel Furniture Co.

Class D, groceries, Evans Brothers. Prior to the awards being announced, W. L. Raeder, of the Scranton Schools, gave a stereopticon lecture on the work of the schools.

These window dressing contests seem to be good things. They stir up a lot of interest, and judging from the interest manifested, will be an incentive to better displays in the future—every day.

Mr. Smedley arranged for talks at Erie, Titusville, Belwood, Altoona, N. Y., Danville, Scranton, Butler N. Y., Brighton.

Dear Sir:—Am inclosing a copy of one of our ads. that we are running in our county paper weekly.

We advertise five articles every week and change the ad. every week.

Please let us know what you think of this style and kind of advertising.

Yours truly,
ROBT. A. ROGERS.

Mr. Rogers is doing most unique advertising. He takes a space two inches long and runs it clear across the page of his local paper. I am having it reproduced in smaller form. Even in spite of the fact that the page on which this advertising appears is badly cluttered up by a bad typographical arrangement, Mr. Rogers' little advertisements stand out and I have no doubt are seen. Here is the entire advertisement, much reduced, together with a little portion of the reading matter both above and below:—

to be a better plan than advertising a hundred and one things in a space that didn't leave sufficient room to say anything adequate about any of them. I would rather take my chances on getting people in the store with ten offerings, persuasively advertised, than with fifty jumbled together in lists. I do not believe, however, that Mr. Rogers' advertising is as persuasive as it might be. "Fruit Cake Ingredients" says merely what everybody knows—that Mr. Rogers keeps articles every grocer keeps. I don't think "Fresh Shipment Hams" says a great deal, either. I shouldn't consider that there was any advertising value whatever in the mere fact that a fresh shipment of a staple article had been received, the new shipment being just like the old. The only way you could get any advertising value out of it is on the theory that the old goods phasized even if it is true. The same applies to "Evaporated Fruits"; as I see it there is nothing said which could create any desire whatever to buy evaporated fruit. "Sliced Meats" is a little better though even that could be phrased a little more enticingly. "Try Sliced of This Sliced Ham," might be a heading, with a little talk about particular ham you use for slicing. Less general. The "Mooreville Butter" paragraph is much more specific and pointed than the others. It advertises one thing by saying about it the special things that are to say about it. I should think that that kind of advertising, if persisted in, ought to create a demand for this butter.

PERFECTLY SIMPLE

No complication. Sell an Indexed Coupon Book for cash (in advance) and treat as a cash sale. Sell on credit and there is but one charge for the book—no other bookkeeping. They hold your transient cash customer. If you do not use them generally you should have a few to control the grouchy customer—the one who over-runs his credit—the one who is slow pay—the one who always disputes the account and others you know of. We sell them in any quantities, all sizes and f. o. b. destination anywhere in the United States.

Let us send you literature and samples. No charge. No obligations

Send It To Six Houses

Why not send a sample of a Coffee you rather bank on, to six houses to match and quote—five that sell through salesmen, and ourselves, who do not?

If our price is the lowest of the six our point is made. You will doubtless know for yourself then whether it will pay you to save salesmen's salaries after that.

We specialize in fine coffees—by mail. Our cost includes no salesmen's salaries, and it therefore ought to be lower than other houses, oughtn't it?

Where the Glass Jar Comes In

The glass jar in which Croft's Swiss Milk Cocoa—and that only—is packed offers the entering wedge to a sale, because it is unusual.

No woman ever saw cocoa packed in glass before; the sight is novel; she asks about it, and if you help a little, she buys.

Bought once, Croft's Swiss Milk Cocoa will always be bought again, for it has a flavor which has never been successfully imitated. Our exclusive making process removes the bad, develops the good, and the result is the smoothest, most delicious drinking cocoa on the market

THE VALUE OF BRIGHT STORES

The difficulty of making a sale—whether it be dry goods or vegetables, jewelry or shoes—is increased tenfold in a poorly lighted store. Other things being equal, the Electrically lighted shop will do more business than the store which uses other illuminants. "Indoor Daylight" can only be obtained by the use of Mazda Electric lamps.

Awards in Window Dressing Contest on Lipton's Tea

Photographs of the Five Winners, with Descriptions of Several.

On this page and the next appear the prize winners in the window dressing contest which closed November 1st. It is unfortunate that the cramping and indistinctness due to reducing the photographs from my window light to a transformer, thence to the third rail system, with an electric headlight, which showed the window up at night.

In the rear I had a lady and gentlemen seated at a table supping tea. I cut a hole in the carton and inserted a quarter-pound box in the display. Lipton's tea is a nationally advertised tea, I presume, and with all of the national advertising they have done, it never induced me to take Lipton's tea in my store until I saw the advertisement and window contest display in your valuable paper, so I made up my mind to try for the sport of it, if not for anything else.

To make the display I had to order the goods. I sent an order for Lipton's tea for fifteen pounds halves, ten pounds quarters and half gross worked well all day. I had a friendly meeting with all my clerks and asked them to help me make this big success, to try and push Lipton's tea in every good home, to get after the peddlers. They made evening canvass among their friends and met with great success. The work was splendid along with our work in the store, and we have built up a nice Lipton's tea business here. Up to this writing I have duplicated another Lipton order and is moving very nicely.

First Prize—D. W. Raub, Harrisburg, Pa.

will destroy much of the effectiveness of the pictures. There was not a poor display among the contesting photographs. Many were content to simply display the goods in the window in symmetrical piles, but a large number displayed much care and originality.

The three judges are all agreed that the prizes should be awarded as follows:—

First Prize of $75 to D. W. Raub, Harrisburg, Pa.

Second Prize of $50 to W. Bartikosky, with Johnson Bros., Cloquet, Minn.

Third Prize of $25 to Solomon Mann, Plainfield, N. J.

Fourth Prize of $15 to Stout & Curran, Frankford, Phila.

Fifth Prize of $10 to Walther & Son, Washington, D. C.

Several of the winning contestants sent descriptions of their displays. These follow:—

By D. W. Raub, Harrisburg, Pa., Winner of First Prize.

I will try to illustrate my window, which drew scores of people who pass to and fro, to stop and gaze upon it. And I have also noticed an increase in the sale of Lipton tea.

The window is as follows: I had an electric train, with a Lipton box car, the tracks were laid in tea for the ballast. I had the electricity the lady's hand—she is taking tea out to insert in the pot. The bottom on each side is composed of pyramids of tea, consisting of half-pound, quarter-pound and eighth-pound cans, with the different varieties.

By Solomon Mann, Plainfield, N. J., Winner of Third Prize.

Under separate cover, via American Express, prepaid, I have forwarded to you a photo of Lipton's tea window display, also a copy of the "Courier-News," in which you will note the advertisement I had in it the week of the display, also circular which was distributed from house to house during the week of

of the 10-cent size, and upon receiving the goods the display was made in the window and a booth was built in the center of the store and one of my best help was assigned to it for the week to celebrate with all my customers. Lipton's tea was served hot on cold days and iced on warm days, and every glass of tea made a friend, and another ring at my cash register. Saturday was the busiest day, it looked like a New York free lunch counter, but the register

The advertisement in the Plainfield "Courier-News" did good, that week especially. My circulars did me and Lipton's a world of good. They say goods well displayed are half sold, goods well displayed and backed by a demonstration like it was here by me are all sold. I made some new tea friends.

I may state at this writing the dolls, table cloth, cups and saucers, spoons and chairs that necessary to dress the window ned to me from the children and my neighborhood, everyone attributed something and all the children were talking in the house their folks and friends about Lipton's tea dolls in Mann's window, and that was a double advertisement for me and the window. I can write a book almost detailing you more details, but I don't think it is necessary. They eight small Japanese lanterns, lit up by small electric lights (such as are used on Christmas trees), strung around each of them.

Fourth.—Five pounds of Domino sugar.

Fifth.—Two imported Japanese tea sets, set up on a table. The top of which is plate glass, 18 x 18, and this rests on eight cans of Lipton's tea, two at each corner.

the proof of the pudding is in eating of it, and the proof of success on Lipton's tea window is sales.

Walther & Son, Washington, D. C., Winner of Fifth Prize.

The display is very novel and the attractive I ever had, and I had some good ones, two prize winners amongst them.

The window is dressed as to give out a Japanese effect, which thought was very good for a tea window. It's the talk of this part Sixth.—Eight pots of chrysanthemums, which I used for the background; also two pieces of lattice work, three feet high and five feet long, and four small Japanese umbrellas, to fill in on the top.

Here is the way I built it: The first thing I built was a platform, one foot wide, 12 feet long; this is about eight inches off the floor and eight inches away from the glass.

On the front part of this platform, which is covered with Lipton's tea taken out of the cans, are setting the two tables mentioned before. On each one of these ta-city and people make it their business to see it and show it to their friends. It has helped the sale of the tea wonderfully. Here is a list of articles I used to dress my window.

First.—One case of half-pound Lipton's tea.

Second.—Three large Japanese umbrellas. They cost $1 each and are very handsome. They show up very well at night when lit up by electric lights.

Third.—Two large Japanese umbrellas, opened up, and a string of bles are two cans of Lipton's tea, a Japanese teapot, cup and saucer. Everything looks just ready to sit down and have tea.

On the background of this platform are pyramids of tea, with a background of chrysanthemums and lattice work.

From this platform to the bottom of the window is a twelve-inch board, twelve feet long, covered with tea taken out of the cans. (I used eight pounds to do this.) Then I took some Domino sugar and formed the words "Lipton's

This Lipton tea window was put in last Friday and it will be taken out Saturday or Sunday.

We should have preferred having descriptions of the other winning displays, but they really explain themselves to a degree.

Court Decides Interesting Point Under Pennsylvania Cold Storage Food Act

In Case Brought by Food Department Against Brelsford Co. Court Decides That Holder of Cold Storage Food Can Hold It in Cold Room for Twenty-nine Days More Before Offering It for Sale.

An interesting case was brought by the Pennsylvania Dairy and Food Department under the cold storage food act recently and decided against the contentions of the department. The case was tried in Harrisburg. It appeared that the Brelsford Storage and Packing Co. of Harrisburg had bought 28 cases of storage eggs from Swift & Co. of Chicago. Swift & Co., when they withdrew the eggs from storage, correctly marked them with the date. They went into storage September 6, 1913, and came out January 3, 1914. They then were shipped into Pennsylvania. The Brelsford Co., prior to selling them, put them into a cold room, which while actually a cold storage room, was not licensed as a cold storage plant. The department brought prosecution on the ground that the Brelsford Co. had violated the following provision of the cold storage food act:—

After food has been withdrawn from a cold storage warehouse for the purpose of placing it on the market for sale, it shall be unlawful for any person, firm or corporation to return such food, or any portion thereof, to such warehouse or any other similar warehouse.

The Brelsford Co.'s defense was that putting the eggs in a cold room they were not returning cold storage food to a "warehouse or any other similar warehouse," and this contention the court sustained. An extract from the opinion was as follows:—

We are of the opinion that the phrase "or any other similar warehouse," used in Section 17, means any other cold storage warehouse; that is, a cold storage warehouse as defined by the act. By this construction the purpose of the law to protect the public from the sale of unwholesome food is accomplished, and the right of the owner to keep cold storage food on the market for sale, from deterioration and waste is preserved.

The jury has found: "In room No. 13 (the cold room where the eggs were put) the temperature is kept by artificial refrigeration at 40 degrees and under, but no food is kept in said room for a longer period than 29 days, and said room is not licensed as a cold storage warehouse. The eggs heretofore mentioned were placed in said room No. 13 by direction of defendant, and held therein by his direction for the purpose of keeping the same until the same should be sold in the usual course of business." It thus appears that room No. 13 does not fall within the statutory definition of a cold storage warehouse, and that the eggs were not placed therein for cold storage, but for the purpose of keeping them until disposed of by sale, there being no intention, in any event, to keep them there for a longer period than 29 days.

Wherefore, in accordance with the terms of the special findings, we direct a verdict of not guilty to be entered in the case.

Views of Various Believers in This Doctrine Who Offer Them as Arguments for the Pending Stevens Bill.

[The "Modern Merchant and Grocery World" has obtained and will from time to time present a series of statements by various well-known persons who believe that the manufacturer should have the right to tell the retailer what price he must get for the manufacturer's product. All of the views which will be presented can be taken as arguments for the pending Stevens Bill, which seeks to give a manufacturer that right.—Ed.]

No. 10.—By John A. Lake, Retail Grocer, and First Vice-President of the Michigan State Retail Grocers' and General Merchants' Associations.

NOTE.

Mr. Lake testified before the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce of the House of Representatives in favor of the Stevens bill. His testimony became really an argument between himself and the various members of the committee as to whether the retail prices of food products should ever be fixed by the manufacturer. The argument was so intensely interesting and so closely touches the business of the readers hereof that we have obtained a stenographic report and here present it. It is not only intensely interesting, but gives a vivid glimpse of the feeling of the members of the Congressional Committee on the subject of price regulation.—Ed.

Mr. Lake. I am in the retail grocery and meat business. I am also first vice-president and representative of the State Retail Grocers' and General Merchants' Association of Michigan.

I wish to speak before you on the Stevens bill—of the favorable things that we, as retail merchants, see in that bill.

First I want to draw a comparison between the merchants. I believe that the merchant engaged in any line of business is directly influenced by the environment of our laws that govern his business, coupled with his environment—that is, the people with whom he deals. In classifying our business men as to business ability I believe that the highest standard might be found in the banker; possibly next in the retail hardware merchant and dry goods merchant of the average town; and the retail groceryman, as an average, possibly will not measure up with them; and the meat men, I believe, would come still below them.

The Chairman. Under what qualifications do you classify these men; under intelligence or integrity?

Mr. Lake. I do not know that I could classify them under integrity without having intelligence coupled with it. Both qualities seem to me to go together.

The Chairman. Do you think intelligence and integrity always go together?

Mr. Lake. I think you are apt to find them both in the same man, at least.

Now, the laws that will raise the standard of our business and still keep it in the hands of the retailer, without allowing trusts, monopolies, or combinations, would be favorable to our business and to the general public, and I believe the Stevens law is such a law as would accomplish this result. By raising the standard of the business man the cheaper, cleaner and more sanitary will he get his goods from the producer to the consumer. I maintain that a good merchant is able to handle those things cheaper, better and more satisfactorily than a poor one, and for that reason I am in favor of this law. He can do this because there is more integrity behind the man. He is ready to stand back of the class of goods he handles, and there is less waste and less overhead charges in the management and carrying on of his business.

Mr. Talcott. Can not an intelligent retail man of integrity do business along these lines now?

Mr. Lake. Yes; he can; but he is handicapped from time to time by some unscrupulous dealer, and I believe I shall be able to explain how that done before my remarks are closed.

We do not ask for a law that will raise any prices. I think that the average man who regards his business is honest in handling the goods as cheaply as possible between the producer and the consumer. He is anxious to do this for the simple reason that the life of his business depends upon his ability to do this; and the present proposed Stevens law, it seems to me, is such a law as will aid him in the accomplishment of this result. The Stevens law does not favor combinations or trusts. I hold those to be wrong. There is no man who has the welfare of his community or his people at heart that would care to enter a combination if he thought that it would develop far enough to be one of those kinds that would destroy competition; and we do not want a law that forbids competition. We do want free competition. There is, however, a question as to what that competition should be on. For myself, I would prefer to see the competition not made on the lowest selling price, but on a reasonable selling price—giving the best value and the best goods for that selling price. I think that would produce the best results.

We do ask for a law that will protect a good article. The Stevens law certainly does this. You want a law that fosters good merchants, because the standing, morally and influentially, of any community is to a large extent reflected through its retail stores, with whom every person comes in contact. We do want business on a sound basis. That does not mean a basis that will pay great big exorbitant dividends, but it means business that would pay a fair dividend on the capital invested and pay for services rendered. And we do want justice in having our business recognized as a legitimate business, first, because I believe the retail merchant will always exist, as he always has existed. Second, it is the cheapest known means of handling produce between the producer and the consumer. There is no system that can get goods from one part of the country to the other as cheaply and with as little waste as the retail merchant.

The Chairman. In what line of business are you?

Mr. Lake. I am in the retail grocery and meat business.

The Chairman. You merely advocate that patentees shall fix these prices; you do not make it compulsory on them always to fix them?

Mr. Lake. No, sir; I do not. I would not make it compulsory under any condition; but if a man can produce through economical advertising processes a superior article and can build up a trade on that article, I believe he is entitled to the benefit of his efforts.

The Chairman. In other words, if the Government gives him a reward by protecting him in his invention, and gives him the sole right to control and manufacture and the sole right of original sale, you think he ought to be given the further advantage to control the price on that through all subsequent transactions, no matter how it hampers trade?

Mr. Lake. I do, if it does not hamper trade; and I believe that control should be under the most rigid conditions of some governmental department whereby that man would give value received to the consumer and that value would be approved by some governmental department. I believe that such a thing would be a good thing.

I will furnish an illustration of my reason for saying this. I believe that every manufacturer is honest in the goods he manufactures, and that he is interested in the man who consumes those goods, and that he is anxious to get that article to the consumer at as low a possible price as he can. Now, he gets those goods introduced to the retail merchant through heavy expenses. The retail merchant handles them because they pay him what we would call a legitimate profit for services and on capital invested. We, through our own advertising, build up a business on that article. Somebody comes in beside us and cuts the price out of it. Possibly he has not the business qualities to succeed, and he adopts that method. We have then got to throw that article out and introduce a new article in order to continue in business ourselves at a margin.

My reason for stating that the manufacturer is interested in the consumer and in the article until it is in the consumer's hands is this: This interest and protection warrants him in keeping a good article on the market, and let me say here that those articles, the standard articles and the copyrighted articles, will average to the retail dealer less profit than the unknown article, but they can be sold cheaper. They can be guaranteed and they can be placed before the public with more satisfaction and honor to the retail merchant than the unknown article, and for that reason we stand in favor of them.

The comparison that I want to draw from this is here: If I owned a lot beside my own I am interested in my home and its value. I want to sell that lot to one of you gentlemen under restrictions that you will keep it in your men's hands and build a house on it; you build at all, that will be in line with the other houses of the neighborhood. Our Government would recognize a law as that, I believe. I am interested in that property I sold. I continue to exercise my interest, my interest in it, because it is beside me. I believe that the manufacturer has the same interest in his article, if he is producing a good article, until it is in the consumer's hands, as I had in that lot.

The Chairman. I do not know anything in the law that will prevent doing that now if he wants to and other fellow is willing. If you want anything you want to control the price of the only thing you have to do is retain title to it as long as you want or until the conditions are come with.

Mr. Lake. That is all we are asking for here and what the Stevens law I understand it, gives the manufacturer the right to do. We ask for a continuation of that right under the Stevens law.

This Tells the Tale

¶ A product which has been on the market fifty-eight years is a product which has stood the hardest of all tests—the test of time. "Knight's Cooking Extracts" is a phrase familiar to man, woman and child, from the Atlantic to the Pacific and from the Lakes to the Gulf. It is easy to tell why; no housewife ever had a bottle go back on her and no housewife ever will. Good extracts must be on your shelves. Grocers, if you sell Knight's Extracts we need say nothing more to you; if you don't, we want one order from you—we are sure of more. You are certain of their absolute purity and a good profit.

WITH THE EDITOR

I was amused by something which appeared in the "Bargain Counter News" last week, in reference to the Stevens bill. It shows how little is really understood about this bill which would allow manufacturers to fix retail prices, by some of the trade papers who cry so loudly for it. First came this:

WORK FOR THE BILL.

When Congress convenes next January there will be a battle royal between the representatives of big department stores and catalogue houses on the one side and the best retailers and manufacturers who supply them on the other. The "scrap" will be waged over the passage of the Stevens bill with representatives of the department stores and catalogue houses seeking every possible means to defeat the measure, while retailers and friends, the manufacturers, will strive just as hard to secure its passage. There are good and valid reasons why the department stores and catalogue houses fear the passage of the Stevens bill, and why the dealers and their good friends desire it to become a law.

If the Stevens bill becomes law, it will enable manufacturers of patented or trade-marked articles to name a resale price, below which no retailer can sell the goods. This will benefit the retailers in more ways than one. Its chief benefit will be to prevent the cutting of prices and will eliminate much of the ruinous competition which comes from every mail order concern or department store. It will also prevent retailers from naming lower prices in competition with their fellow dealers on the same articles. It will not, however, prevent manufacturers from making cheaper grades of goods to enter into competition with their brother manufacturer, whose claims are built largely on quality.

It is to be hoped that retailers will take off their coats and work for the passage of the Stevens bill as they never worked in the interest of any other measure. If all the retailers throughout this country will only write one letter each to their Congressmen and Senators, demanding that they vote for the Stevens bill, its passage will be assured. The bill will only be defeated if the retailers and their friends are negligent of the necessity of hard and timely work in favor of the bill.

This would have been perfectly all right, had it not been followed on the same page by this:—

MOVE THE STICKERS.

Within the short space of a few weeks many of the retailers will be taking their annual inventory. It might be well to begin now thinking about the inventory and selecting those goods which have not been fast sellers and move them out at a price before the inventory is taken. The fall season is always the best season for closing out lines that have failed to move satisfactorily. The lower the inventory the cleaner the stock and the smaller the next investment. The annual inventory will and must reveal the results of the current year and whatever of the assets are represented in old, shop-worn, or out-of-date stock must discount appreciably in not reckoning at inventory time that is actually and honestly pushing the stickers over the counter and out of the display rooms as fast as people will buy them. Sacrifice a little money, if necessary, and start the next year with a clean stock and seasonable goods. The stickers must be disposed of and should be, for the good of the business.

For the information of the esteemed "B. C. N.," I will say that if its first suggestion is carried out, and the Stevens bill, in its present form, passes, its second suggestion cannot possibly be carried out. Under the Stevens bill it will be impossible to "move the stickers" among branded goods, at a "sacrifice of a little money," unless the manufacturer consents, which he will never do.

Something else occurs to me to say about the Stevens bill, which aims to give manufacturers the right to fix retail prices. The argument of the manufacturers who want this bill is this: they say that it will protect the small merchant who wishes to do business quietly and without using sensational cut prices as baits, from the unfair competition of the large stores and the chain stores, who cut well known brands in order to get people in. Under the Stevens bill, these stores will not be able to cut well known brands, and therefore will not be able to compete in that way. With all merchants selling at the same price, the competition on well known brands will really center on service, and one man will have the same chance as another.

But will he? I doubt it very much. It seems to me inevitable that the minute a large store finds it impossible to make capital out of cut prices, it will invent some other way to get people in which the small merchant cannot match. Already these stores use organ recitals, cooking lectures, wild animal exhibitions and many other things, in addition to the cut prices which they can now use. Denied the cut prices, they are going to use other and superhuman efforts to attract people to their stores, for their very lives depend upon it. As I see it, the small merchant would be more outdistanced under the new regime than he is under the old. Under the old regime, he can to a certain extent fight fire with fire. Being under far less expense than the big central store, or even the chain store, he can occasionally cut a price himself if he feels he can turn a trick by it. Under the Stevens bill he couldn't cut any brand prices and he couldn't possibly meet the greater resources of his larger competitors as to other trade devices. So where would he be?

I will tell where I think he would be. He would be exactly where the small dealer in talking machines is—on the edge. Victor talking machines are rigidly limited in price.

All over the United States, by large dealers and by small, they sell uniform prices. How does the large dealer get around that? Various easy installment schemes which having ample capital, he can operate where the small dealer cannot. Therefore the latter gets merely the leavings of the business.

The manufacturers of patent medicines, who are organized in the Proprietary Association of America, are attempting among themselves a plan to create a large fund to be spent winning back the confidence of the public in proprietary medicines. A million dollars is talked of and it could probably be very easily raised. These and prosperous manufacturers of patent nostrums have in the past made perfectly stupendous profits.

I suggest that the million dollars would better be spent making patent medicines worthy of confidence. They never have been. Some of them were pure fakes—there was nothing in them to cure anything. Others had a few drugs in, nothing calculated to cure what they were said to cure. And all of them were pernicious, because they fostered the idea that a man—it was usually a woman—could treat his own ailments. They made drug-getting easy; it should be made hard. I can never speak calmly of the patent medicines that intentionally preyed upon their victims by dosing them with alcohol or dope. A manufacturer who produces a "medicine" like that, knowing that all his victim will get from it will be false stimulation which when it has faded itself upon him will be a worse disease than the one he started with, deserves to boil for a million years in a cauldron of his own mixture. He is a wretch beneath all human contempt.

People never had any real "confidence" in patent medicines. They were under a delusion about them which since so many of them have been shown up, has become so much weakened. We hope and believe that people will never be under that delusion again.

Clean floors, show cases and counters attract trade. The surest way to promote cleanliness is to have good light. The cheapest things in this world are light, air and water.

Proper ventilation is very important. People are often unconscious of good ventilation, but bad ventilation is undesirable and unhealthy.

Keep your store well lighted. A well-lighted store is always attractive, and goods can be displayed to better advantage.

"We Told You So"

Read this letter, received last week from a New York coffee dealer:—

"I have found in the last few months that my coffee trade has increased with your coffee. Uniform taste and grade seems to make them popular. I have found when customers tastes are educated to a certain coffee, that to them is the best coffee in the city, so that it pays to have a uniform grade."

This really refers to Harisco Standardized Green Coffee.

A few years ago it was thought to be impossible to standardize grades of green, run them uniform, and get the dealer interested in coffees of this description. We knew different and we have taught grocers all over the United States different. The way to get trade from peddlers to-day is first to get coffees that you can guarantee to your customers will remain the same. You can never do this in the world as long as you buy on a price basis. The only basis for a growing coffee business is Kup Kwality.

OUR NEW DEPARTURE IN ADVERTISING*A YEAR'S END LETTER—To Progressive, Experienced, Well-Principled GrocersOUR GOOD FRIENDS:—

Greetings to you once more, our Thirty Thousand Merchant Allies!

By now, if we should see any of you face to face for the first time, should we not meet like old Comrades?

Our Monthly Letters began in a desperate "Try" for some fresh grip and new flavor to our long time Advertising Habit. But these Letters have grown into Neighborly Chats and Friendly Calls, because so many of you Merchants talk back to us charmingly.

This Number completes our Letter Series and "Ye Editor" will lay down his pen with a sense of regret, as if a Monthly Pleasure were to be left out of the programme for 1916. The Best of Everything to you, now and always!

We wonder what 1915 is leaving with you worth while, our Merchant Friends?—Real increase in Store and Stock? In Cash and Character? In Friends and Favor? In High Ideals and Usefulness? If one goes on the principle "Business is Business" and "When I am in Rome I may do as Romans do" we in the thick of the fray may not realize how some things in Business Life seem to the Public. Notice our Artist's startling suggestion in his Bulletin Board Sketch?

"I SEEM TO HAVE 'EM ALL RIGHT. HA!HA!"

Have we caught any of this infection also?

How do the Ads. of the Postum People strike you? Is it necessary to "damn Coffee" in order to sell Postum? And is that a Manly, Fair Fight for Trade? OR CONTEMPTIBLE?

Mr. R. E. Tomlinson, Counsel for The National Biscuit Company, has presented "Ye Editor" the fifth edition (1915) of their book, "National Biscuit Company Trade Mark Litigation." As you know, this great Corporation has seventy-five Plants scattered through the Country, to serve best the distribution of its Products and to take advantage of nearness to the sources of supply. It has Trade Marked nearly 100 of its various Products and Devices for marking its Packages. During the last ten years it has been beset by a race of Conscienceless Imitators and the volume is the story of these Commercial Piracies.

During these ten years there have been 882 separate Infringements by different Competitors in the Cracker Bakery Line.

Forty-nine cases prosecuted to the end before the United States Courts against these Infringers have been successfully won, and the remainder, more than 800, have been abandoned by the Imitators, rather than stand Suit. What a sickening story of the lack of business honor. If a man in a little shop, beset by narrow limitations on all sides, is tempted to cut corners to eke out his scanty living, one hopes the Merciful Judge will take his environment and well-nigh hopeless fight into account, but the Record above Concerns Wholesalers, Controlling Capital; Men of great Enterprise, who have brains or who can pay for them.

As we turn the pages we note such words as these from the lips of the United States Judges on the Bench—their own Declarations or Quotations which they approve—"we declare is calculated to deceive or mislead." "The Case is too plain to waste any words on it."

IN WRITING TO ADVERTISERS KINDLY MENTION "MODERN MERCHANT AND GROCERY WORLD"

"You are combining and confederating with others to injure the Plaintiff."

"Your actions and doings are contrary to Equity and Good Conscience."

"To restrain Fraudulent Imitating."

"The Fraud is apparent."

"We are satisfied that the Trade Mark, as applied, is not only calculated to deceive the ordinary purchaser, but that it was designed, adopted and used for that purpose—It was planned in advance."

What a bitter arraignment and exposé of the lack of honorable principles in Leading Business Men! Shut your eyes and can you not hear His Satanic Majesty chuckle again, "I seem to have 'em all right. Ha! Ha!"

There is an influence in the closing of an Old Year, with it's unchangeable history, and the opening of a New Year, with all it's possibilities, that appeals to every one of us. Under such sober thinking do I not say to myself, "I must be more of a Man in 1916!"

We haven't space to advertise our own Wares to-day. This is a message of Good Will and Good Wishes. The Latchstring is out for you all the time at Mott Street.

Very sincerely your friends,

More on the Stevens Bill From Mr. Corey.

Argos, Ind., Nov. 23, 1915.

To the Editor.

Dear Sir:—I must confess I am unable to see the danger or detriment of price maintenance.

The Stevens bill could not possibly apply to only a small portion of any stock.

Your main objection seems to be that it will "destroy mercantile initiative."

Does this mean a sacred privilege to cut and slash, undermine and tear down, demoralize, misrepresent, a ruthless disregard of truth, honesty or maker's reputation? We have all this under present conditions.

Mercantile initiative under the Stevens bill would mean honest, fair, sane and intelligent competition. Salesmanship, courtesy, advertising publicity, display demonstration, store policy, location and improved methods would be the key to prosperity. Business would reach a higher plane and co-operation possible. Quality would rate at its true worth, and the the real interest of the consumer protected.

I cannot endorse your argument in your October 25th issue. For identical goods the cost of selling varies little whether in big or little store, cash or credit. The trouble is that the big and shrewd buyer is too much favored by price concessions. This has grown to be an abuse of enormous proportions.

It is usury pure and simple, and the time is fast coming when the small retailers will rebel in a most forceful manner.

The Stevens bill should regulate price to wholesaler, retailer and consumer. And, believe me, no honest dealer will complain that the profit margins are too large.

I was slow to accept this doctrine but the more I investigate it the sounder it appears.

Of course we won't get the Stevens bill or any other good business law if we are divided and continually splitting straws. You are a good lawyer. You claim to be a friend of the country merchant. Suggest something better and more practical and with brighter chance of success. If you can't do it, then join us in pushing the Stevens bill. It looks good to me.

Yours truly, M. L. COREY,
Secretary National Retail Hardware Association.

From the Atlantic Stamping Co.

Rochester, N. Y., Dec. 1, 1915.

To the Editor.

Dear Sir:—Your article regarding the Atlantic Stamping Co., Rochester, N. Y., was forwarded to us by one of our customers.

The really dominant feature of the article, which you head: "Who Knows the Atlantic Stamping Company?" and wherein you refer to our rating, is the only thing that interests us. To this we enter an emphatic protest. The Atlantic Stamping Co. is an old established company doing a business in high-grade metal ware of approximately half a million dollars a year.

Leading commercial agencies, through regular and special report, rate the company in six figures, with good credit.

In a spirit of fairness, we ask that this letter be given as prominent a space as that given to article referred to.

Yours very truly,

ery, the Agency hereby agrees to furnish to the undersigned subscriber.....Inquiry Forms, together with the necessary envelopes for same and to promptly re-mail all replies and all letters sent to us for remailing, and to furnish special detailed commercial reports on corporations, firms or individuals at the rate of $1 each.

All remittances are made by the delinquent direct to Creditor, and this Agency will not charge any commission or fees for same.

The subscriber agrees that the services of this agency shall not be used by him for the benefit of another.

This contract expires one year from date. All unused supplies are the property of the National Credit Exchange Agency, which the subscriber hereby agrees to return unless subscriptions be renewed.

The rates are $10 for 50 inquiry forms; $25 for 200, $50 for 500 and $75 for 1,000.

The contract is not entirely clear. If the subscriber is to pay for these forms in advance, we suggest that this might be risky. The agency would then have collected for its work in advance, and it might not be so energetic as the man who is to make his money out of his work. Really, all that the agency agrees is to sell you so many forms for so much money. It agrees to furnish commercial reports on people, but they will cost $1 each—that is evidently extra. Outside of this, the contract is exceedingly vague, where it speaks of what the agency is to do, though perfectly clear where it speaks of the money to be paid. We don't exactly know what these "inquiry forms" are, but we do know that we wouldn't sign this contract under any circumstances.

Chicago's First Help-Yourself Grocery Store Opens.

Chicago's first "Grocerteria" opened a few days ago. The idea of a grocery store in which the customer helps himself, paying for his purchases at the door, as he leaves and carrying home his own purchases, originated on the Pacific coast from whence also came the cafeteria idea now so universally popular. The "Grocerteria Corporation," which is sponsor for the experiment in Chicago, was incorporated last month under the laws of Illinois, with a capital of $2,500. The incorporators are Geo. L. Veatch, who is connected with the wholesale house of Marshall Field & Co.; A. L. W. Veatch and Philip E. Veatch. The store will follow very closely the lines of the California grocerteria, which is quite successful, in that it will carry a stock of plainly priced goods, employ no clerks, make no deliveries, sell all brands and feature cut prices. There are no shelves. Everything is on tables, so that articles can be easily reached. One cashier will check and collect for all purchases, as the customer is about to leave the store. By cutting the cost of handling and carrying stocks, the store expects to get prices so low that the housewife cannot overlook the resulting advantages to her pocketbook.

War Affecting Several Imported Food Products. Spreckles Predicts Higher Sugar for Next Year. Local Flour Situation. Market Summary.

New York, December 3, 1915.

News received here during the week from France is that the French Government had placed an embargo on the further exportation of nuts, which was expected to last for a considerable period. French nuts on spot, in this country, particularly in the New York market, are in very small supply. It looks like a shortage during the holiday season. Several other foreign food products are also beginning to feel the pinch of the war. Several of the most important French mushroom canning establishments have been closed and the exporters have notified their American representatives that there would be no more French mushrooms until after the war was over.

Cables from Spain report a strong advance in the price of pimentos, which are Spanish red peppers. This will not be felt at once, as we have some stocks on spot.

Italy continues to prohibit the exportation of tomato sauce, beans, peas, cheese and many other food products. Sweden prohibits the exportation of fish; Norway of cheese. Nothing whatever is coming from Germany or Russia. Greece has prohibited the exportation of olives.

Claus Spreckles, who is the leading factor in the Federal Sugar Refining Company, gave out an interesting statement during the week in which he prophesies that sugar will be higher next year than it has been this year. Mr. Spreckles says that the fundamental reason for the high prices of sugar recently was the destruction of the European beet fields during the war. Wholesalers, however, were slow to realize the exact situation, and when they finally did realize it and rushed into the market to buy, they caught many refiners short of raw sugar. The refiners rushed out to buy sugar and put the market up on themselves. Mr. Spreckles emphasizes that usually at this period of the year sugar declines because of the opening of the new season in Cuba and also on account of the receipts of domestic beet sugar. This year the beet granulated people are taking advantage of the situation and are already selling their product at extremely high prices, and are not pushing for sale. The reason for this is their hope of an extension of the sugar tariff, which was scheduled to be removed May 1, 1916. It is generally expected that the tariff will be continued on account of the need of revenue at this time. Mr. Spreckles says that the beet granulated people are making a perfect harvest out

The Profit in the WRIGLEY Package

¶ Nothing pays you a profit until you sell it. Wrigley's is already sold before you buy it—sold by one of the heaviest consumer advertising campaigns in the world.

¶ Into the WRIGLEY package we put the best gum that can be made—behind each package we put a silent, consumer ad. salesman. The sales are sure, the profits certain—and that is our idea of real co-operation with our distributors—the Retail Merchants.

THE PENNSYLVANIA PLAN is a new idea in co-operation—Pennsylvania merchants enthusiastic distributors. We are working to make a bigger demand for WRIGLEY'S in Pennsylvania than ever before. If the merchants will link their efforts more closely to our advertising—display of their granulated sugar. Last year they were glad to get 4.90 cents and this year, with the largest crop on record, they are getting 5.75 to 5.80 cents. Mr. Spreckles thinks that 1915 is going to see higher priced sugar than 1915, because the United States will have to supply practically all of Europe with refined sugar, besides supplying its own needs. Already the American refiners are shipping sugar to England, France, Switzerland, Uruguay, Mexico, Bermuda, British West Indies, French West Indies, Newfoundland, Panama and Malta.

The Federal Sugar Refining Co. has been very active in its effort to work up a sentiment in favor of discontinuing the sugar tariff, and has issued considerable literature on the subject. It is in favor of the removal of the tariff and some of its literature emphasizes the fact that sugar should sell with the tariff off at 1 cent per pound cheaper than the present price. It is regarded in the trade here as certain that the sugar tariff will not be interfered with.

The local supply of flour has become exceedingly low and the situation is serious. All of the bakers in the city are seriously handicapped by the lack of spot supplies, and some of them have several times been almost forced to close down for lack of flour. The local scarcity is enabling many handlers to ask and obtain bonuses on the price of immediate delivery. The mills report that the condition is improving with them, although they are not yet caught up with their orders.

Although the National Canners' Association has not yet given out its figures it was announced here late in the week that the 1915 tomato pack would be expected to be 8,469,000 cases. This about accords with the predictions which the paper has made from time to time to the pack. It is about 55 per cent of the 1914 pack and about 65 per cent of the 1913 pack. It would appear as if the current supply was hardly sufficient for the probable demand this year.

SUMMARIZED MARKET CONDITIONS

Tea quiet and unchanged throughout the entire line.—Coffee heavy and dull. Santos 4s comparatively weak. Rio fairly steady.—Sugar nervous and unsettled. Raws very scarce. Sales made as high as 5.12 cents. Granulated 6.15 cents. Beet granulated 5.75 cents. Sugar being cut in second hands.—Tomatoes firm and unchanged. Corn at ruling quotations. Peas fairly steady and quiet.—Canned fish of all sorts changed and quiet.—New prunes denormalized on spot on low prices made for second hands. Coast market quiet and unchanged. California raisins slightly weaker. Other dried fruits unchanged.—Nuts firm on account of light supply.—Wheat strong and active, largely because Canadian wheat has been commandeered by the English Government.—Flour a shade higher and firm. Demand fair.

One Moment!

¶ You sell some kind of cooking or salad oil because you have found there is a constant demand for it. For cooking it is not so expensive as olive oil or butter, while it does just as good work. Much better work than lard or lard substitutes. And many people prefer it to olive oil on salads.

¶ What salad-cooking oil are you handling? Is it just an ordinary cotton seed oil? Do you really know what it is?

¶ We have been oil refiners for nearly a quarter of a century, and we say to you that there has never been a salad or cooking oil on the market as high grade as Goldenoyle. Look at the packing— isn't that fine?

¶ Prof. Allyn, the celebrated Westfield, N. J., Health Board chemist, analyzed Goldenoyle and gave us a recommendation for it that warmed our heart.

¶ Put Goldenoyle in your store while it is new. You know as well as we do the advantages of that.

Packed 4 doz., 7-oz. bottles; 2 doz. small cans, 21 $\frac{3}{4}$ oz. each; and 1 doz. $\frac{1}{2}$ -gal. cans. On 3-case order we prepay the freight. Beautiful recipe book for retailers' customers.

The Grocery Markets

Tea.

The tea market is unchanged for the week. Business is reported good and the market is in a healthy and steady condition and will probably continue to be for several weeks. Prices show no change whatever for the week.

Coffee.

The coffee market is dull and weak. The trade are buying every day, but only for actual wants, as nobody seems to have very much confidence in the situation. Rio 7s are still relatively firmer than Santos 4s, because they are scarcer. The former grade is about unchanged for the week, while the latter is a shade off. There is plenty of coffee about, and this is one factor in the weakness. Milds are unchanged and dull. Java and Mocha unchanged.

Sugar.

The sugar market has had several ups and downs during the week. Raws, on account of scarcity, have advanced again and sales have been made as high as 5.20 cents. There has seemed to be little or no sugar available for spot demand. Some new sugar from Cuba will be available shortly, but if it is shipped to England to fill orders from there, it will not relieve our scarcity. The Cuban crop is late. Late in the week some sales were made at slightly easier prices on account of freer offerings from Cuba. The refined market has ruled from 6 to 6.15 cents for granulated during the week, but as the week closes some of the refiners are dropping to 5.95 cents. The consumptive demand for sugar is very poor.

Syrup and Molasses.

Glucose remains unchanged for the week. Compound syrup is fairly active at ruling quotations. Sugar syrup shows no change for the week; is in demand in a very small way. Molasses steady, with a very firm and high outlook.

Fish.

The mackerel situation is not improved. New Norway mackerel, both on spot and abroad, are very firm and high, particularly when the quality of the new catch is considered. The demand is very light, as a great many people have found it easier than they expected to get along without any mackerel whatever. Shore mackerel are satisfying a good part of the demand, although prices have not changed. Cod, hake and haddock are in fair seasonable demand at unchanged prices. Imported sardines show no relief, stocks being still very small and prices very high. Domestic sardines are unchanged, except that sardine packers are trying to get 10 cents more a case. Salmon unchanged as to all grades and quiet.

Canned Goods.

Tomatoes are a shade firmer than last week. Some Maryland 3s can still be bought in a large way, f. o. b. factory at 90 cents per dozen, but many holders are standing out for 92½ cents, and some sales have actually been made at that price. Advance figures on the 1915 pack are slightly over 8,500,000 cases. The situation and the outlook are very strong and prophecies are general that the market will go to $1.25 next spring. Corn and peas are unchanged and quiet, corn being relatively firmer than peas. Apples in very moderate demand at unchanged prices. California canned goods are moving in a very small way, meaning particularly from first hands, and show unchanged prices. Small Eastern staple canned goods unchanged at ruling quotations.

Dried Fruits.

The prune market is considerably upset and unsettled, due to the arrival of new-crop prunes bought at a much lower price than now prevails. Second hands holders have offered them rather freely at substantial concessions below the ruling price. Some sales have been made on this basis. With the excess the market is quiet. Peaches and apricots are both firm and unchanged in price, with a fair demand. Apricots are the duller of the two, as they depend principally upon export demand. Raisins unchanged and quiet. Currants still scarce and high. As stated in recent report, there are practically no Turkish figs in the market. California figs are being offered freely and pushed, but are not meeting with very ready sale.

Beans and Peas.

The pea bean situation is very strong and high, on account of the slowness with which the crop is being picked and the unusually large percentage of poor beans. The market ranges from $3.87 to $4.05 per bushel; demand fair. Marrows are unchanged on a basis of $ per bushel in a large way. California limas show an advance of about ¼ cent largely in sympathy with the high price of Eastern beans. Green and Scott peas are firmer and unchanged in price.

Butter.

There is an active consumptive demand for all grades of butter and the market is firm at an advance of 1 cent per pound for the week. The make is very light and does not bid fair to increase very soon. The outlook is for a good, firm market, with further advances if there are any changes.

Eggs.

New-laid eggs are steady at a decline of 4 cents per dozen for the week, due to increased supplies. The demand for cleaning up all of the receipts on a rival, and the market is healthy at the revised prices, and depends as to the immediate future on the weather. Un-consumption a larger quantity than anyone would suppose and without causing special comment. The shipments since September have been distributed to all sections of the country, and the natural supposition is that this section will continue to be the principal source of supply when the quotations in other markets conform to the prices here.

In the line of canned vegetables baked beans and kidney beans were the strongest items because of the higher cost of the raw material for canning purposes. These articles have been lying dormant for a long time, but they are awakening now. The higher grades of string beans and wax beans have been fairly active this month, while the ordinary grades have been neglected. There were more orders during the week for corn and sweet potatoes in straight carloads, but for the other vegetables there were only the small daily orders, mainly for mixed carload shipments, with little or no changes in the prices.

There was a better demand for pears during the week, from the lowest priced fruit in water up to the highest grade in heavy syrup, but the market was dull for the other fruits. As a rule, all this fall the orders for canned fruits have been much lighter in size than is usually the case, and also smaller in point of numbers. It is noted that the higher class of berries, white cherries and pineapples in syrup were bought more often than the water fruits, with the exception of pie grated pineapples, which have been nearly sold out.

Tea.

Conditions are all favorable, labor is employed as never before and at high wages, which enables the retailer to sell more merchandise, make more profit and carry a larger stock himself. Crops are the largest in our history and there is more money in circulation than ever before, so all are sure of a good business and on a profitable basis.

Tea is in particularly good shape, stocks are light and buyers must replenish right along.

Congress meets December 6th and the Cabinet, up to this time, is unable to show how to raise the additional revenue; there have been many suggestions. The Secretary of the Treasury suggests retaining the duty on sugar, increase in income tax and a tax on gasoline and oils. A Washington despatch dated November 23d stated that Congressman Rainey, of Illinois, called on the President and stated that he was behind in the preparedness legislation planned and that he had in mind ways and means of raising $350,000,000 by taxation, included in which was a larger tax on beer and a duty on coffee. Should his suggestions be carried out, it would certainly carry a duty on tea as well.

Of course, these are only suggestions and must not be considered as a definite programme, but they do show what some legislators are thinging about and there will undoubtedly be a variety of opinions when Congress meets.

We are still convinced that it will pay any merchant who has a regular outlet for tea to protect himself for the next three to six months. Should there be a duty imposed he is a big winner; if nothing is done he has the cream of this year's importations on the lowest basis of the season.

Pennsylvania News Items.

Because of ill health, A. M. Howes, manager of the Commercial Club of Erie, and secretary of the Pennsylvania Retail Merchants' Association, has tendered his resignation to become effective December 1st. Recently Mr. Howes resigned from the presidency of the Twenty-three Club of the First Ward. At the present time Mr. Howes is manager of the Commercial Club, secretary of the Pennsylvania Mutual Fire Insurance Co., secretary of the Pennsylvania Retail Merchants' Association, managing editor of the "Pennsylvania Merchant," and secretary of the Erie Motor Club. It is understood that Mr. Howes will not resign as secretary of the Pennsylvania Retail Merchants' Association.

A Novel Suggestion—Give Clerks Samples of Goods You Expect Them to Push.

"I would like to venture a suggestion that, if followed out more often, would make a $5 appropriation look like $5,000," said George Stadlander, head of a chain of retail grocery stores known as the Progressive Stores, in New York City. Mr. Stadlander was talking in the noon-day meeting of the New York Advertising Club, Friday, November 19th, on the subject, "Selling Groceries to the Consumer."

"Manufacturers ought to see to it that every grocery clerk gets a full-sized sample of their products—samples that it would be worth the clerk's while to take home. Then, if the clerk and his family think well of these products, the selling battle would be more than half won."

In Coffee It Pays to Have Uniform Grades.

Read what an up-to-date dealer wrote us about Standardized Coffee, you will find it in this issue under the heading of "We Told You So." For some time we have been trying to educate dealers to the use of uniform coffees. This dealer's experience shows our point clearly. He says, "When customers' tastes are educated to a certain coffee, that to them is the best coffee in the city, so that it pays to have a uniform grade. Kup Kwaliti has been our standard for years—we willingly pay above market prices in order to get the best—frequently our line of coffees cannot be duplicated by any firm in the country. If you want to control the coffee business of your territory, let us figure with you. Wm. B. Harris Co., 65 Front street, New York City.—Advt.

We Recommend This.

For several weeks the "Modern Merchant and Grocery World" has been presenting to its readers a new article which it regards as rather unusually superior to the common run—Goldenoye, a new cooking and salad oil, refined and packed by one of the best oil refiners in the East. Every grocer knows of the large demand which has sprung up for pure vegetable oils of this character. As this week's advertisement says, they cost less than olive oil and butter, though they do just as good work. There is no question about Goldenoye at all. It is oil of superlative quality and is packed in a way fitting to its quality. Any grocer who wants something which he can offer in high-grade trade with the remark, "Mrs. Smith, here's a cooking oil that I'm sure you will say is the best thing you've ever had in your kitchen"—can find it in Goldenoye. It is not ordinary cotton-seed oil, but a high-grade vegetable food product, of absolute purity which Prof. Allyn, the Westfield chemist, has analyzed and highly commended.

The End of Bob Gaines.

Well, sir, I saw a sight last week I ain't a-going to forget. It was the sight of old Bob Gaines in the poor house. I never did think Bob would get anywhere, but I never calculated he'd land in the poor house. The only good thing about it is that Bob himself don't seem to be worrying much.

Bob Gaines was one of the first customers I had when I started out on the road. Let's see, that was blame near twenty years ago. He didn't have much of a store, but he made a living out of it. Didn't seem to have anybody belonging to him. Told me once he had a brother in California or somewhere out there, but he never heard from him. He never got married—didn't have enough money, I guess—and he lived all by himself in a little room over the store.

Anybody could do most anything with Bob. He didn't have any roots, if you know what I mean. I'll bet I could have sold him ten times as much any time as he ought to have, but I knew if I did it wouldn't ever be paid for, so I never did it. I wouldn't have done it anyway, for it's a crime to put it over on a chap like that. Bob was a good-natured cuss—everybody liked him.

I lost sight of him for about five years, because I stopped making his town. First time I've been there since 1910 was last week. When I got in there I asked for Bob—his store wasn't there any more—and they told me he was in the poor house! What d'ye know about that? You could have knocked me down with a crowbar.

"Poor house!" I said. "For the love of Mike! How did he ever get in a place like that?"

Well, just as I'd always expected—Bob went all to pieces. Some new stores opened near him and he couldn't stand up against 'em. Anybody could get away with poor old Bob. His little business dropped away, and pretty soon he couldn't pay his rent. People took care of him for a while, but by and by they got sort of tired, and some of 'em had a meeting, and there didn't seem to be anything else to do with him. So they carted the poor old cuss over the hills to the poor house.

"But couldn't he get a job?" I said. "Good Lord, he could have made enough to pay his board somewhere, couldn't he?"

"No, he got all crippled up with rheumatism," said the man I was talking to. "He wasn't any good—nobody would have wanted him around."

"Where is this poor house?" I asked.

They told me it was about five miles out of town, so I went out that afternoon. On the way, I thought about the old fellow a lot. Funny thing about it—Bob always thought he knew it all. You never could argue with him—he was always right. That was the only thing I didn't like about him. He would talk by the hour about the department stores and the chain stores—they were just starting to push out into the country then. He could spot their mistakes and tell 'em where they wasn't running their business right. No matter what a big success somebody had made in business, Bob would sit there in his footy little store, maybe with goods waiting to be delivered, long after the time, and tell where the other fellow'd been wrong and how he could have done it better.

I didn't look forward much to seeing the old fellow—out there in the poor house. I didn't know whether they put 'em in uniforms or not. I'd never been in a poor house before, though I suppose I ought to have gone often so as to get used to it. So when the little Ford car I went out in drew up and I got out, I found I had cold feet.

I asked for Bob Gaines and they took me back in a big room where they all sit when they want to, and there the old cuss was over by a window reading. He looked pretty old, although I don't believe he's much over sixty. And both of his hands were all twisted up with rheumatiz.

He didn't see me till I got plumb up to 'him. I was pretty well worked up and if he'd have let out I would have too. Think he did it. Not so's you could see it. He got up like he was out of the porch of his country place.

"Hel-lo, my old friend!" he said. "I'm glad to see you! Where did you come from anyway? Sit down."

Gee I was glad he took it that way, for when I get worked up and let out, I make a regular disturbance.

Selling Talks With Clerks

BY A MAN WHO HAS BEEN ONE

Conducted by W. E. SWEENEY, Manager for L. Lehman & Co.'s Department Food Store, Dover, N. J.

Mince Pies.—The mince pie incident represents the stupid answer: "I don't know."

This grocer runs a bakery, makes good stuff, and makes particularly good pies. The woman, it seems, bought a 25-cent one for Thanksgiving. It tasted so good to her and was praised so much by her guests that the day after she went there again to make another purchase.

None were ready just then and so she could not wait. She inquired from the clerk the kind of mince meat used; his reply was: "I don't know."

Would you blame a man for wanting to hold that fellow's head under a pump?

The identical mince meat used in these pies was sold over the counter at 12 cents and so advertised. Not only was the pie sale lost, but a good customer for the mince meat itself which might possibly have made twenty other good mince meat customers.

You see what these three thoughtless words meant on just one item. Can you realize the lost sales and the lost sense of satisfaction that such an answer would represent in a year if allowed to go on uninterrupted?

Never say "I don't know" on a question that concerns your own work and that common sense tells you to answer correctly. Edify yourself, at least, by finding out. Surely it must be a pleasure as well as a privilege for every manager to answer questions, little or big.

Personally, the more they fire at me the better I like it.

"People want to know the difference in these two syrups," said one fellow. They're about the same size, one is 15 cents and the other is 22 cents.

"Well, sir, read your labels, and you will find one is 60 per cent. sugar and 40 per cent. corn, the other is all corn syrup." It didn't occur to him to take advantage of the best food clause enacted.

Compare the mince meat answer with one that happened a couple hours before this was written. The old lady wanted canned mushrooms for chopping. She hadn't bought any in some time. The clerk at once showed her a can of mushrooms. But my! 30 cents! she said, "That's our price and I can't change it." Oh, no; that at that stage would have meant no sale, but here's what he said in substance: "You know, madam, a year and a half ago we sold this same grade of mushrooms for 25 cents, and our profit then was larger than it is to-day at 30 cents. The reason is it is solely a war condition—the goods being packed in France, and I am quite sure no other store will sell them for less money."

He is an asker, if such a term is permissible. He wants to know why he should pay more and so is so and so, then he goes to work and tells it.

This good old lady apparently had her heart set on mushrooms, and it was the way he handled her that prevented her going over to a competitor and buying some.

Great to be an asker!

No. 340.—Tying Yourself Up Not to Re-engage in a Certain Business.

The following, an extract from a letter written by a Massachusetts reader, will I am sure interest everybody:—

I am about to sell my business, a business which I have built up in the last ten years and which is valuable and making a good, regular profit. My health has broken down, and it is my intention to rest for about a year and then re-engage in the same business in the same city. My buyer has asked me to sign an agreement not to go back in the same line of business, but I have put him off until I could obtain your advice. Have I not heard that such agreements are illegal? I do not wish to tie myself up so that I can't go into business again, and as this is the business I have always followed, I should be out if I agreed not to go into that. Please advise me how far a man ought to go in making an agreement not to re-engage in business.

This kind of an agreement which this correspondent speaks of, viz., an agreement by the seller of a business not to go back into that business, is considered by the law an agreement in restraint of trade, and must be framed within certain limits, or it will not be enforced. The courts do not believe in restraint of trade, but they will enforce an agreement which protects the buyer of a business from the former owner's competition, if it doesn't go too far. Under the old English law, which is the foundation of our law, you could not tie up a man to stay out of business. That rule, however, has been relaxed, and you can do it to-day, anywhere in the United States, within certain limitations.

Those limitations are that the seller must not agree without limit as to time to remain out of his former business forever, nor must he agree without limit as to territory, to remain out of his former business everywhere, even for only a limited time. For instance, if a hardware dealer sells his store and agrees never to go into the hardware business anywhere, the agreement is void. If he agrees not to go into the hardware business anywhere for a year, the agreement is void. But if he agrees never to go in again in the town where his former business was located, the agreement will usually be held to be good. The courts, however, look with most favor upon agreements that keep a man out of business in a given territory for a limited time, thus prescribing a limit both as to time and territory. The purpose of course is to give the buyer time to establish a personal connection between the customers of the house and himself.

In most States to-day there is no iron-clad rule about it. When one of these agreements gets into court, the courts listen to all the facts and then ask themselves this question: "Here is a man who has bought a business, relying upon the seller's promise that he would not immediately start in to compete with him. What sort of protection will be adequate for him?" And then they will supply that protection if they can; in other words, if the agreement the parties have entered into is not unreasonable, it will be upheld. Particularly because it is a low thing for the seller of a business to sell on an express promise not to at once compete with his buyer, and then, with the latter's money in his hand, plead that his agreement was invalid.

I can best give point to this explanation by citing a few of the restrictive agreements which have been upheld by the courts: an agreement on the sale of a magazine not to publish a similar one; an agreement on the sale of a law practice extending throughout England, not to practice law in England for twenty years; an agreement not to engage for ten years in business as a soap manufacturer within forty miles of Lockport, N. Y.; an agreement not to engage in business as a banker in a certain place for ten years; an agreement not to carry on the tobacco business in Albany or Schenectady (N. Y.) and surrounding towns; an agreement not to run wagons over a butcher route which had been sold; an agreement by the seller of a bakery never to solicit trade from the old customers; an agreement by the clerk for a firm of custom house brokers not to take a similar position within fifty miles of the same city for twelve months after he gave the position up.

In all these cases and in many more, the courts held that the agreement only afforded reasonable protection to the person involved.

Here are some agreements which the courts have held invalid because they involved unreasonable and unnecessary protection: a agreement not to practice dentistry in any part of a district two hundred miles in diameter; an agreement not to carry on a perfume business within six hundred miles of London; not to become a coal dealer anywhere for nine months; not to make yeast powder anywhere for eight years; not to re-engage in a certain manufacturing business anywhere within a thousand miles of the seller's former town; an agreement by an employee not to engage in similar business, after leaving his employer, within the

Be sure to use only clean, sanitary looking fruit, or the display will prove the opposite of a temptation to passersby. Cover the floor of the window with yellow paper. Fill each space with a different fruit, using citron, lemon and orange peel, cherries, raisins, currants, prunes, peaches and apricots. ars in any of sixteen States; an agreement by an oil dealer not to back in that business anywhere Indiana. the city of Indianapolis cepted.

Here the standard was the same does the agreement go beyond the e of needed protection? If it es, as it did in all of the above ses, it is set aside, and the seller the business is as free as if he ver made it.

I fear I cannot give this corre- ndent anything like exact advice, I have no knowledge of the facts his case. Naturally, one should ver tie himself up any longer n he can help. ouching the shrinkage in hams and n, which the packers give as the f reason why they cannot put the weight upon the package, a test was ntly made on a ham which when vered out of the smoke house and y for market, weighed 16 pounds ounces. Several weeks ago I discussed a somewhat unique sampling scheme used by Charles Pomerantz, West Philadelphia delicatessen dealer. To any consumer who would mail him back a postal card which he sent out, he would send a box containing several samples of such things as potato chips, pretzels, potato salad, etc. I asked Mr. Pomerantz to let me know how the scheme pulled, and I have from him now a letter giving this information. He sent out the samples with this card on the top:—

MADAM:

IT'S A PLEASURE TO SEND YOU THIS BOX OF "GOOD EATS."

I WANT TO THANK YOU FOR THE INTEREST YOU HAVE SHOWN IN MAILING BACK TO ME THE POSTAL CARD I SENT YOU.

And here is Mr. Pomerantz's own story of how it worked:—

Inclosed you will find a card that was put on the top of the box of samples we sent out in reply to the postal cards as per your article on advertising. I would have answered you sooner, but have just returned from an eight weeks' trip through California. I put out 500 of these postal cards and we received about 120 answers; the box of samples cost me 24 cents. My outside man called twice a week to see the people who received the samples. We found it a very poor investment, but trying to be a live one, I try almost any thing that's new.

One of the main faults with trying to get business out of our neighborhood in the grocery business is that the average woman will not go more than two or three blocks to buy groceries. Any other line she'll go miles, but not groceries.

You live in Philadelphia; when out in my neighborhood come in to see me. I'd like to talk to you for awhile on advertising. I make my money on selling "Good Eats," but often times I think (and only think) that I know a little about advertising.

I admire the ideas of the "Modern Grocer" and Chicago "Tribune" in Chicago in their work with the retail grocer in Chicago. There is a great field for your paper here in Philadelphia, I think.

C. POMERANTZ,

Fifty-second and Walnut Streets.

This sampling scheme seemed pretty expensive to me, although even at a cost of 120 times 24 cents, the money could easily have been gotten back had only one new customer been obtained. However, the trouble with all these sampling schemes is that they bring out a lot name wasn't on it, but probably there was some good reason. One question is, does Laurelvale cider stand up under this description? If its superiority is simply the dream of an imaginative advertising man,

LAURELVALE SWEET CIDER

Laurelvale Sweet Cider is simply apple juice.

And apple juice is what you get, or what you should get when you buy Cider.

The difference between Laurelvale Cider and ordinary Cider is just the difference in the fruit itself and the way it is handled.

Our man looks his apples over one by one.

He washes the good ones, and these big, bright, wholesome "good ones" are put into the LAURELVALE press.

He has been doing this for us for a number of years and we pay him his price because we get a good thing.

You pay us OUR price and you in return get a good thing.

We believe this is good business.

We can buy Cider for less money and so can you.

But it wouldn't have the natural sweetness or the natural flavor or the natural goodness and purity of LAURELVALE Cider.

Delivered to you in clear-glass gallon jars. Per gallon, 25c.

of cheap grafters who are simply out for what they can pick up for nothing. They have no idea of buying anything. Probably out of the 120 who sent in Mr. Pomerantz's postal, 95 per cent. were of this type.

I want to reproduce here a good cider advertisement. It was used by the Lehman store, Dover, N. J., and was written by W. E. Sweeney, the live wire who writes our "Selling Talks With Clerks." The advertisement reaches me in the shape of a good quality circular 5½ x 9 inches, with this reading matter on it.

Without doubt this ought to sell cider. I wish Mr. Sweeney would tell us whether it did or not. I don't know just why the firm's this is going to be bad advertising. It should sell the cider once, but if people say "I don't see any difference between this and any other cider," the advertising has not met the final and only true test.

NOTE.—This department is devoted to the criticism of advertising matter sent in, to the devising of new advertising ideas for special occasions, upon request, and to the suggesting of original advertisements when data is supplied. All communications sent for this Department should be addressed to the Editor of Science of Advertising. They will be taken up in strict rotation.

Pennsylvania Organization Notes.

About 100 retail merchants of Pittsburgh met at the Hotel Schenley on November 19th and formed the Merchant Bureau of the Chamber of Commerce. It was a representative gathering of Pittsburgh's best retailers and the meeting was addressed by Louis C. M. Reardon, secretary of the National Chamber of Commerce. Herbert L. May was chosen president pro tem, and he appointed a Committee on Permanent Organization, which will report in the near future.

The Lakemont Civic and Commerce League held a big meeting on November 22d. Geo. H. Mosser, manager the Altoona Chamber of Commerce made the principal address.

Mr. Smedley was the principal speaker at a meeting of the Bellwood Chamber of Commerce meeting on November 22d. There was a large attendance of the members and about 100 members of the Women's Civic League, forming in all a splendid audience. After the speeches an elaborate lunch was served.

The Bellwood Chamber of Commerce is a member of the State Association and is doing good work. President Moore and Secretaries Janison Farland are live-wire hustlers. The object is to boost and build Bellwood, working for good roads, trade expansion and anything that will make it brighter and better.

The Women's Civic League is a splendid body of women, working hard to help wherever and whenever help is needed for town development.

Merchants of Reading are making an earnest effort to have the license fee of transient merchants raised from $50, the present fee, to $200.

The Hollidaysburg Chamber of Commerce celebrated its first anniversary with a banquet at the Y. M. C. A. Hall on November 23d. It was a splendid event, with good music and splendid, inspiring addresses. George W. Williams is president and John N. Drass, secretary.

Mr. Smedley was the speaker at an anniversary banquet of the Inland Grocery Co., a body of retail grocers of Altoona, held at the Hotel Leroy on November 23d. Covers were laid for 100 guests and every seat was occupied. Resident Nash, acting as toastmaster, introduced the speaker. There was good music and an elaborate dinner.

The event was a most pleasant one. The Inland Grocers are a splendid body of business men and are working together in harmony for the betterment of trade conditions. F. H. Nugent is managing secretary.

Mr. Smedley has some open dates for January. He is glad to serve any association needing his services.

The Wilkesburg Business Men's Association is doing good work and Manager G. H. Hahn is busy developing new ideas for the benefit of the members.

Secretary McGarry, of the Johnstown Association reports that from present indications the space in the food show will be disposed of in short order, and the profits from the show will be used for the development of the Johnstown organization and for the benefit of the merchants. No outside parties are interested and the event will be managed solely by the association.

Dry Goods Business Still Ahead.

Marshall Field & Co., in their weekly review of the dry goods trade, say:—

Current wholesale distribution of dry goods has exceeded the record of the corresponding period of a year ago by a considerable margin. Road sales for immediate and future delivery have been greater than for any year since 1909.

Customers have been in the market in about equal numbers.

Collections are above normal. Prices are firm.

Your Customers Know Franklin Carton Sugar As Soon As They See It

FRANKLIN CARTON SUGAR is a neat, clean, attractive package that looks well on your shelf, and once seen by customers is sure to be remembered. They remember the cleanliness, the sparkling purity of the sugar, and insist on having the CARTON that keeps it clean and pure.

Sugar is probably the most sensitive article sold in a grocery store and should be protected from dust and dirt. Scientists tell us that it breeds germs with dangerous rapidity, when once exposed. Women may not examine sugar to see if it has germs in it and they may be content to use sugar which needs no examination to show that it is dusty; BUT, as soon as they see FRANKLIN CARTON SUGAR they KNOW it is better, purer, finer, cleaner sugar than they have ever had before. If you are the proprietor of a pure food store you can tell your customers about FRANKLIN CARTON SUGAR in a way that will increase their respect for your desire to serve them with the purest and cleanest foods which can be obtained. (See foot note at the bottom of this advertisement, "What to tell customers.")

You can buy FRANKLIN CARTON SUGARS in the original CONTAINERS of 24, 48, 60 and 120 lbs.

THE FRANKLIN SUGAR REFINING COMPANY PHILADELPHIA

FRANKLIN CARTON SUGAR is guaranteed full weight and refined CANE sugar

WHAT TO TELL CUSTOMERS

"This is a PURE FOOD store. We believe in selling only the best, purest, CLEANEST goods, because the best is none too good for our customers. We sell FRANKLIN CARTON SUGAR because it is the cleanest and purest sugar obtainable."

The Subscribers' Bargain List

Have you got any goods you don't want? Anything—canned goods, groceries, hardware, dry goods, anything at all that's in good condition, but won't sell for you.

If you will make a price on it we can probably sell it for you in a hurry. Write us about it, stating the quantity, condition and your best price. You might give the original cost, too. We will give it a key number and offer it to our 4,000 subscribers. Your name will not appear unless you want it to. All sales ought to be on a cash basis.

The point is that what won't sell for you may be in everyday demand for somebody else, who will be glad to get your stock of it at a bargain.

There will be no charge for this service anywhere—we do it to help along.

Stores That Look Like Junk Shops

No matter how hard you try to avoid it, your store will look like a junk shop if its shelves are overcrowded.

Of course you can overcrowd shelves supported by Baines' Brackets, but you won't reach the crowded point until you've got 25 per cent. more goods on the shelves than you can put on the old-fashioned shelves.

Baines' Brackets hold up shelves without the old-time uprights that eat up space. The whole, unobstructed shelf-length is available for goods. We've figured up the gain many times—it amounts to a clear increase in shelf room of 25 per cent.

PIQUA BRACKET CO. = = Piqua, Ohio

Here Is Your Question Answered

Why put in Croft's Swiss Milk Cocoa when you are selling five brands now? Well, because it is different from the rest, for one reason. It is the only cocoa packed in glass. It stands alone, and you know how novelty helps a thing to sell. The grocer who infuses a little novelty into his business is the grocer who succeeds.

Another thing, Croft's Swiss Milk Cocoa is better than the rest. That isn't a bluff, honestly. We take out of our cocoa, in the making, a substance which other manufacturers allow in, greatly to the injury of the flavor of their goods.

Now do you know why you should sell it?

Will you mention the "Modern Merchant and Grocery World" when you write?

Harvard Research Bureau After Examination of Many Grocery Store Figures, Deduces This and Many Other Important Facts About Expense of Doing Business. Read the Table Showing What Percentage Each Expense Item Bears to Your Sales.

[We present herewith some matter sent us for publication on "Expenses in Operating Retail Grocery Stores," which has been prepared by the Bureau of Business Research of Harvard College. We have published other matter regarding business problems from the same Bureau, all of which has been exceedingly practical and valuable. Every retail grocer in business, whether he has a large or small store, should read this through.—Ed.]

What does it cost to operate a retail grocery store? How often should the stock be turned? What are the average sales per sales person? In order to answer such questions as these and to learn the best practice in store management, the Bureau is collecting exact figures and other specific information from retail grocers. A preliminary summary of the figures which have been obtained up to the present time is presented in this bulletin.

In order to provide a common basis for securing figures from retail grocers it was necessary for the Bureau to prepare a uniform accounting system. Among the retail grocers who keep books, by no means a large majority, the methods have been far from uniform. As in other lines of retail trade, some grocers have charged their businesses with salaries for themselves; others have not. In handling rent, delivery expense and other items, there has also been little uniformity. For the purposes of scientific investigation, however, it is essential not only that books be kept, but that they be so kept that an item on the books of one dealer shall mean the same thing as an item with the same name on the books of another. The items which are to be entered under each account must be specified, and provision must be made for every item of profit and expense. This is the aim of the Harvard System of Accounts for Retail Grocers, and upon this system as a basis, the Bureau has obtained the figures which are summarized in this bulletin.

In the retail grocery trade there are several classes of stores. In each city there is usually at least one large store which sells fancy groceries and specialties. The margin of profit and the expenses of such stores are usually higher than in other grocery stores; the service requirements are greater. Chain stores, department stores and mail-order houses are distinct classes, which must be considered separately. Other grocery stores, which constitute a large majority of the total number in the country, fall into two general groups—one selling groceries only, and the other selling groceries and meats and provisions. The summary published here is based on the figures secured from these ordinary, everyday grocery stores and grocery and provision stores. No figures for chain stores, department stores, mail-order houses, or fancy grocery stores are included in the tabulation.

The figures for stores selling groceries and the figures for stores selling both groceries and provisions have been tabulated separately, and independent summaries prepared. On comparison it appears that for most of the items the significant figures are the same for the two groups. Where there are any differences between the groups they are slight. Consequently the results have been combined in a single table, which is fully representative for ordinary grocery stores whether or not meats and provisions are carried.

which is found in the largest number of stores. It is the predominant, typical, or most frequent figure. The figures given for a smaller but significant group of more efficient stores indicate standards which are possible of attainment under ordinary conditions. For example, the lowest figure for total delivery expense is 1.1 per cent. of net sales, the highest is 5.9 per cent., but the common figure is 3 per cent., and the attainable standard is 2.5 per cent. This means that any grocer, operating under ordinary conditions, should not be spending more than 3 per cent. of his net sales for total delivery expense, and that he should try to bring that expense down to 2.5 per cent. The other figures in the table can be used in the same way for making comparisons.

ated, or which do not appear to be fully comparable with others, show a gross profit higher than 27.9 per cent., and a few less than 14.6 per cent. In order to be conservative, however, for this and other items, only strictly accurate and comparable figures are given in the table. Within this range the bulk of the figures are between 18 and 23 per cent. The most common or typical figure is 21 per cent. The percentage of gross profit does not vary regularly with the volume of sales. In stores with large sales the percentage of gross profit is frequently higher than in small and medium sized stores. The Bureau has been surprised to find that some stores in which fairly accurate expense accounts are kept, have no records of their purchases and cannot determine their gross profit.

EXPLANATION.

Gross Profit. In the grocery stores from which the Bureau has received strictly accurate figures, including, as has been stated, grocery stores which carry meats and provisions, gross profit ranges from 14.6 per cent. to 27.9 per cent. of the net sales. Several stores, for which the figures are partially esti-

Salaries and wages of buying force is the first item in the expense statement. In the average grocery store the buying is done by the proprietor. Consequently this account represents chiefly a prorated share of the proprietor's salary, depending upon the proportion of his time which is spent in buying. The common figure for salaries and ages of buying force is one-half one per cent. of the net sales.

Other buying expense is commonly small, since the bulk of the orders are given to traveling salesmen. Numerous stores have no expenditures to be charged to this account.

Salaries and wages of sales force is the largest single item in the expense of operating a retail grocery store. It varies from 3.5 to 10.6 per cent., as indicated by the strictly accurate figures, with several partially estimated figures higher than 10.6 per cent. A few stores seem to have an expense for this item lower than 3.5 per cent., but the Bureau is not certain that their figures are strictly comparable with others. The bulk of the figures are between 5 and 8 per cent., concentrating around 6.5 per cent. A sufficient number of stores spend only 5 per cent. of their net sales for salaries and wages of sales force to indicate that that figure is ordinarily possible attainment.

In the stores in which these low percentages of expense for sales force are found, the wages of the employees are by no means lower. The economy is obtained not from lower wages but from larger sales per employee. Apparently the differences in the relative proportions of the orders received by telephone or by solicitation at residences of customers do not greatly affect this percentage. This conclusion is based on a comparison of sales force expense in stores in which (1) the telephone orders predominate, (2) the orders solicited at residences predominate, and (3) counter trade predominates. The common figure for sales force expense is practically the same for each of these groups. The predominance of telephone orders does not necessarily bring a large reduction in this expense; the time spent in taking an order is small as compared with the time used in filling it and individual telephone orders tend to be smaller in amount and more frequent in number. There appears to be a definite tendency for grocers to collect a smaller proportion of their orders at the residences of their customers; many have ceased to send out any order solicitors. Nevertheless this does not account for the differences in the percentage of sales force expense. Other factors, such as management and the arrangement of the store, which increase the sales per employee, have more influence in reducing this expense.

Advertising expense is small in the retail grocery trade, varying from practically nothing to 1.8 per cent. The common figure is one-tenth of one per cent.

Wrappings and miscellaneous selling expense is also small. It ranges from 0.03 per cent. to 1.4 per cent., centering around 0.4 per cent., a little less than one-half of one per cent.

Total selling expense varies from 4.5 per cent. to 10.8 per cent., with a marked tendency to concentrate around 7 per cent. In numerous stores total selling expense is reduced to 5.5 per cent., or lower.

Wages of delivery force is another large item in the expense of operating a retail grocery store. The lowest figure for wages of delivery force is 0.6 per cent. and the highest is 3.5 per cent. The common figure is plainly 1.5 per cent., with 1 per cent. as an attainable standard. This lower percentage, like that for salaries and wages of sales force, is not realized because of low wages, but through improved organization of delivery service.

Other delivery expense varies from 0.3 per cent. to 3.4 per cent.; the common figure is 1.5 per cent. and 1 per cent. appears to be attainable.

Total delivery expense ranges from 1.1 per cent. to 5.9 per cent., and the typical figure is 3 per cent. As a rule, a store which spends much over 3 per cent. of its net sales for total delivery expense is unprofitable; 2.5 per cent. is a figure frequently reached and a considerable number of stores spend only 2 per cent. for delivery.

Management and office salaries is ordinarily about 1.5 per cent., varying from 0.3 per cent. to 3.8 per cent. Several retail grocers have reported that they do not spend any time in managing their business, and it is not beyond doubt that this is only too frequently the case in the retail grocery trade. The Bureau is not prepared to state that it would be advisable for the average grocery store to attempt to reduce its management expense.

Why a Manufacturer Should Be Permitted to Fix the Retail Price of His Product

Views of Various Believers in This Doctrine Who Offer Them as Arguments for the Pending Stevens Bill.

[The "Modern Merchant and Grocery World" has obtained and will from time to time present a series of statements by various well-known persons who believe that the manufacturer should have the right to tell the retailer what price he must get for the manufacturer's product. All of the views which will be presented can be taken as arguments for the pending Stevens Bill, which seeks to give a manufacturer that right.—Ed.]

No. 10.—By John A. Lake, Retail Grocer, and First Vice-President of the Michigan State Retail Grocers' and General Merchants' Associations.

NOTE.

Mr. Lake testified before the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce of the House of Representatives in favor of the Stevens bill. His testimony became really an argument between himself and the various members of the committee as to whether the retail prices of food products should ever be fixed by the manufacturer. The argument was so intensely interesting and so closely touches the business of the readers hereof that we have obtained a stenographic report and here present it. It is not only intensely interesting, but gives a vivid glimpse of the feeling of the members of the Congressional Committee on the subject of price regulation.—Ed.

Mr. Sims. If I understand you, you want the law so modified that you may actually part with the title and yet compel the purchaser to sell at the price made by the manufacturer, just as though the manufacturer had retained title and was selling the goods directly through agents?

Mr. Lake. Yes, sir. If he sold the article under contract or under provisions the purchaser agree to certain known conditions when the purchase was made.

Mr. Sims. I am speaking of the manufacturer now, from his standpoint, not from the other. The chairman is right in his statement that you have the right to place that article for sale through agents; you will thereby retain the title, and therefore you can absolutely fix the price. But under the law, as I understand it, or as the decisions of the courts have been in the patent cases, you can not sell it and actually part with title and then afterwards control its sale to the consumer at the price you think is profitable?

Mr. Lake. That is as I understand it.

Mr. Sims. You want the law passed to enable you to actually sell it, yet control the price to the consumer just as though you retained the title, selling through agents?

Mr. Lake. Yes, sir.

The Chairman. All civilized nations have regarded it as a pretty good recognition of genius that they give the inventor or patentee a number of years exclusive right to manufacture and sell the article or secure a royalty on it. If you go ahead and heap up other benefits on him and attempt to give him a monopoly through all generations, that is something unheard of, I think, and as the law now is the balance of the world will pray that the limit of his protection under his patent will expire as soon as possible, so they may get a chance to buy it cheaply.

Mr. Lake. It appears to me from observation that many articles that he has patented or copyrighted, after they pass from his protection, are substituted by articles that many unscrupulous people push upon the market that do not contain the merit of the original article. As I explained, I believe that these articles should be under the most careful scrutiny of some department of the United States Government and this privilege granted only to those that have value.

Mr. Willis. What have you to say on the proposition that this bill tends not to bring about freedom of competition, but tends to destroy competition? I have heard that objection to it. I am not stating it as mine, but I want to know your observation on it.

Mr. Lake. I appreciate this question, because it is one I shall be glad to answer. I do not believe that it destroys competition. I believe that competition will still exist. The competition will not be alone with the retailer, but it will be with the manufacturer and the jobber, who are anxious to give the best article possible and as large a volume as possible, or as large a value as possible for a certain retail price. That price might be 10 cents, for instance, and I believe that rather than working down from the standard to the cheaper quality, we would work up to a certain retail price that would have greater value to the consumer.

Let me say here that as a business man I would rather sell more volume for 10 cents proportionately than I would for 5 cents. I would rather give more for a certain amount than less for a lower price, because we can handle it in putting up the packages, in delivering, and in serving the people cheaper than we can the other way, and give better goods and a better value.

Mr. Willis. Your idea, then, is, as I understand it, to practically do away with competition, so far as price is concerned, and transfer that competition to the quantity and quality of the article?

Mr. Lake. Yes, sir; and I would say it would only be the smallest per cent. of the retail articles that would come under this law; bulk stock and the majority of goods handled in our stores could not possibly come under it.

Mr. Willis. I have heard the complaint that possibly this bill, if enacted into law, would result in increased prices. Now, in your very excellent statement you turn that about. Can you give us any further light upon that proposition?

Mr. Lake. I would be pleased to in this way: I am going to furnish two or three illustrations along that line. We will take the Ivory soap, manufactured by Procter & Gamble, of Cincinnati. That is familiar to every person in this House, and it is a standard article. Procter & Gamble charge the retailer 4 cents, regardless of the quantity purchased. The price is the same. There are never any free deals, yet I do not know of any article sold out of a retail store along that line of goods at a 5-cent price that has an equal value with that soap. There are certainly few, and if there are any it is something for which the manufacturer gets a good price and gives a good value for his money. The Kellogg Toasted Corn Flakes come under the same line. Formerly toasted corn flakes sold at 15 cents. Through manufacturing a superior article for the money he now charges us about 8 cents per package. We sell it at 10 cents. The price almost forbids the better stores from selling it at three for a quarter, and I believe that in that article we get a better value and a better article than we do in most competitive goods. The Royal baking powder is a line of goods that comes under a good price and a good article.

Mr. Sims. The Procter & Gamble 4-cent price you mentioned, does that refer to the standard cake of soap they make?

Mr. Lake. The Ivory soap.

Mr. Sims. Do you mean the Ivory soap?

Mr. Lake. Yes, sir.

Mr. Sims. And the retail price is 10 cents?

Mr. Lake. The retail price is 5 cents.

Hold Annual Banquet at Bellevue-Stratford. About 300 Dine, Among Them Many Jobbers.

The Philadelphia Association of Manufacturers' Representatives held its annual banquet at the Rose Garden, Bellevue-Stratford, last Wednesday evening. About 300 were present, the bulk of the diners being wholesale grocers and their representatives from Philadelphia and nearby territory. The programme was in a sense informal, brief addresses being made by Senator E. E. Beidleman, president pro tem of the Pennsylvania Senate; ex-Governor Tener, Dairy and Food Commissioner James Foust, and E. J. Cattell, city statistician. George McFarland, baritone singer at Keith's this week, sung several Irish songs, which captured the crowd from the start, and Dr. E. O. Rice, a professional entertainer, handed out a batch of capitally told stories. One of the high spots of the dinner was the fact that no picture was taken and nobody was pestered to buy prints. Mr. W. H. Rohr was toastmaster and the Entertainment Committee were Geo. Nowland, chairman; S.

H. Frowert, H. A. Moore, H. C. Flint, Truman L. Palmer, Frank A. Smith, J. H. Apel, M. L. James, E. L. Tupper, C. C. Green. Mr. H. G. Flint, a former president of the association, now located in Niagara Falls, came down for the banquet.

All Failures Save Hotels Show Decline From November, 1914.

That is Because They Are Now Coming in Comparison with Exceptionally Bad Months of 1914. Business Disasters Still Above Five-year Average.

Being now in comparison with the closing months of 1914, when the war was in full swing, and business was very bad in all lines, the current months are naturally showing a considerable decline in failures. Hotels are an exception—they show worse luck than for five years past, probably due to the prohibition sentiment.

The figures as to staple lines for November are as follows:—

General Stores.—November, 1915, 164; liabilities, $1,401,260. November, 1914, 222; liabilities, $2,348,890.

Groceries.—November, 1915, 288; liabilities, $1,204,985; November, 1914, 309; liabilities, $1,537,710.

Clothing and Furnishing.—November, 1915, 103; liabilities, $750,195; November, 1914, 142; liabilities, $1,266,403.

Dry Goods.—November, 1915, 68; liabilities, $608,313; November, 1914, 75; liabilities, $527,702.

Shoes.—November, 1915, 3; liabilities, $187,101; November, 1914, 48; liabilities, $325,205.

Hardware.—November, 1915, 24; liabilities, $198,019; November, 1914, 34; liabilities, $445,701.

Failures in general stores, groceries and shoes are still somewhat above the average for the last five years.

Written for the "Modern Merchant and Grocery World."

The Idea of Designing Store Interiors So As to Look Different

New York State Contributor Says the Profession of Interior Designer to Smaller Stores is Not New, as Recently Suggested in This Paper.

One of the writer's good friends in Philadelphia, Mr. W. Arthur Noble, Director of Service for the William F. Fell Co., has just forwarded an editorial that appeared in your paper on November 8th in which you recite in substance, a comment by "Printer's Ink" concerning store arrangement.

When this matter was first called to our attention from the article that appeared in "Printer's Ink" we were on the point of writing them defending our position, but felt that we would possibly never reach a peer and that our labors would be in vain. We are a little surprised, however, that in your editorial comment you haven't made mention of the fact that there are store fixture architects and designers who handle the problems of interior treatment as it applies to the grocery business and that the efforts of these men are not confined to work in large stores as you intimate.

[This editorial comment was as follows:—

I am not disparaging modern methods of arranging a store interior. In fact, it has always been my idea that there is room for a new profession—that of interior store architect, who would go into a store and show the proprietor how to rearrange it so as to be more attractive, more convenient, more compact and more saving in shelf room. This could be done in nine stores out of ten. There are men who do this, but they confine their work to large stores.]

The "profession" as you term it is not new.

Of course everyone will realize when a client consults an architect the architect is employed in an advisory capacity only and while he is in a position to make suggestions, he has no power to force his client to adopt these suggestions.

In view of the experience of the modern store fixture architect, his suggestions should be considered by the merchant and the wise merchant is beginning to realize the value of the service of such a man.

There are fixture businesses which have a special department that handles this which is in charge of a corps of efficient men who have made a life study of systematic arrangement for the grocery store and frequently recommend a departure from the conventional type of shelving and counter arrangement as it applies to grocery stores.

Occasionally there is a grocer in a receptive frame of mind, a fellow who wants his store designed in a unique manner and at the same time being practical, and a number of stores embodying such features have not only been designed but installed.

Some of these interiors provide for the salesroom itself being small, while there is a large order and service room in the room where clerks in the salesroom proper have practically all merchandise at their elbow and where they can serve the trade without unnecessary steps.

The Business Career of L. L. Creasey, of the Brite-Mawmin Corporation.

In a recent issue appeared some matter relative to a series of retailers' co-operative buying enterprises, chiefly in the West and South, which were being exploited by a Chicago concern called the Brite Mawmin Corporation, Hearst Building, Chicago. This has established co-operative jobbing houses in various cities. The prime mover is one L. L. Creasey, who seems to have had a somewhat interesting career. He has dabbled in various schemes for several years, and some have been highly unsuccessful. He was a partner in H. E. Langdon & Co., Cincinnati, Ohio, and suit was filed against him for dissolution and for receivership. He was connected with Langdon, Creasey & Co., grocers, Covington, Ky., which went into the hands of a receiver, but later we believe paid in full. In 1907 he was conducting retail grocery stores in Scottsburg, Ind.; Laurenceburg, Ky., and Brandenburg, Ky. The enterprise collapsed with assets, $1,600; liabilities, $6,250. In 1909 he conducted a bakery business, which went into a receiver's hands and paid 40 cents on the dollar. Any merchant contemplating taking any stock in the Brite Mawmin scheme will be interested in the above.

WITH THE EDITOR

I confess I never lose my interest in the reports of officials who go about inspecting retail stores from a sanitary standpoint. The reports of these men are to me always entertaining reading. We practically have no such officials in Pennsylvania, for there is no sanitary law here. They have such a law in North Dakota, and the North Dakota Dairy and Food Commissioner is good enough to send me regular copies of their reports. I take the following from the last received:—

The general average of the grocery stores is good. There are several, however, that have dirty store rooms and basements. The yards, and lack of toilet facilities, is the cause of low scores in many instances. Notice has been served that one of these places must be improved or the place closed.

The general average for the restaurants is low. The lack of toilet facilities, condition of yards and kitchens in many places is the cause of low scores. A few of the restaurants are in a very insanitary condition.

Several of the confectionery stores are in a very insanitary condition. The back rooms are used as a dumping ground for their rotten fruits, old paper, straw, boxes and crates. The flies are bad in these places and the fruits are not protected from the dust and insects. In many places the floors are unclean. A few are without toilets and wash rooms.

The hotel kitchens are, with one exception, in very fair condition.

The general average for the meat markets is low. Several are without toilets or even a place to wash their hands. The work rooms in many cases are dirty. The floors and refrigerators need considerable attention in the places scored below 80 per cent.

Several of the bakeries are not kept in good condition. The flies are numerous in the places and some of the stock is not protected.

The creameries and ice cream factories are all in very fair condition.

The wholesale houses are all kept in very fair condition.

I have looked over this report, hoping, as I have done before, to find some grocer who had gotten a score of 100 per cent., but I did not find any. Two restaurants got 100 each, but the best grocery store got 99.5. I am not denying that that is an exceedingly good score, particularly when one store, called "Dempsey's Grocery," got 38.5! But if John P. Yerxa, retail grocer of Fargo, N. D., can bring his store within one-half of one per cent. of perfection, it would seem as if he ought to be able to go that other half per cent.

Whatever else in this issue remains unread, the article on the expense of doing business, from the Harvard Bureau of Business Research, should be read from the first word to the last. It would do no harm to read it twice. It gives information on a subject which holds the life or death of business—the subject of gross profits, cost of doing business, and net profits. Some stores know all about this, in connection with their own business, but they are woefully few. Most stores know a little something about it and know that little imperfectly. Some know nothing.

As an example of the useful information contained in this article, the Harvard Bureau declares that the store that spends more than 3 per cent. of its net sales for delivery is pretty sure to be unprofitable. Some stores got delivery expense down to 1.1 per cent. of net sales, others were paying 5.9 per cent.

The gross profits made by grocers were found to vary most remarkably and unaccountably—from 14.6 per cent. to 27.9 per cent. In most cases the range was 18 to 23 per cent., and more stores made 21 per cent. gross than anything else. One store with inadequate bookkeeping was regularly making a loss of 3.3 per cent.! The highest net profit found to be made by any grocer was 5.5 per cent. on the net sales. The average was 4.5 per cent.

In the table which is published with the article appears the percentage which each item of expense, even down to wrapping, should bear to the net sales. Shown there is the lowest figure the Bureau has found for the various items, the highest, and a fair average which any grocer could safely adopt for himself.

One piece of information is noteworthy, as showing the wide difference between men's business methods, and between their abilities. That is as to the number of times per year stock is turned over. The Bureau found that some grocers were turning their stock over 23.8 times a year or about once every two weeks! Others were turning it only three and a half times a year, which means about three months to a turn. The average was seven times a year, showing that the stores which turned many times a year were very far in the minority.

Pat Malloy, of Williamsport, Pa., who attended every convention of the Pennsylvania Retail Merchants' Association since the first, is dead.

He died a week ago of kidney and liver trouble. Most people thought he was older, but his age was less than sixty. Pretty nearly every association man in Pennsylvania knew Pat Malloy. He was a good speech-maker and a good story teller; he has enlivened many a convention and many a banquet. But he was not alone a story teller; in his way he helped settle the problems of the association meetings. Pat was a good man and a great many people will miss him.

A considerable number of retail grocers are at this moment confronting a situation which is interesting in its bearing upon the much debated question of the profitability of nationally advertised goods. Because of an extra push given it by a number of jobbers these retailers have been induced to stock a certain nearly unknown brand of rolled oats. I understand there is nothing to be said against the oats in any way; they are good standard goods.

The retailers are reporting that now that they have these oats on their shelves, they cannot get them off. There is no demand for them—the demand is for the better known brands. At the full price has been found impossible to divert the demand to them in any substantial degree. What is a retailer to do in such a case? He has his money locked up in this stock; it does not readily move. Shall he turn in and by using every art of salesmanship, try to get his customers to buy? What will be his turning point? The unknown brand may be as good, but it is not as better. Nor is it cheaper. What can he say that will move the goods?

This is not a theory, but a condition that confronts every retailer who stocks an unknown brand which does not differ materially from an advertised brand in which it comes into competition. In the end, after all his work, he usually cut the price of the unknown brand and get rid of it which will probably leave him worse off than if he had not stocked it at all. Doubtless he will feel like saying, "if I must cut the price of something, at least let it be something that I don't have to work to sell."

Worth Reading and Remembering

No. 5.

People like to see employees with clean collars, and like to see goods handled by clean hands.

Your responsibility does not cease after goods have been sold. They must be delivered. If you use wagons, remember that people do not like to see dirty delivery wagons drawn by poor horses, driven by careless drivers.

If messengers deliver goods, it is well to have them wear neat, clean uniforms. The better they look, the more they call attention to your business.

Official Figures Show 1915 Tomato Pack to Be 8,469,000 Cases.

scarcely More Than Half Last Year's, but Last Year's Was Excessive for Demand. 1915 Pack Below Consumption.

The official figures compiled by the National Cannery Association, covering the tomato pack of 1915, are now available, and show a very decided falling off as compared with previous years. The 1915 pack is the smallest on record since the compilation began, which was in 1908.

The figures are as follows:—

	Cases.
1908	11,479,000
1909	10,984,000
1910	9,235,000
1911	9,749,000
1912	14,022,000
1913	14,206,000
1914	15,222,000
1915	8,469,000

Thus the current pack is not much more than half last year's, which, however, was excessive. The consumption has never been accurately gauged, but is probably from ten to eleven million. There was some carry-over from last year, but it seems to have disappeared. The situation is very strong, as reported elsewhere, the present quotation on Maryland 3s, f. o. b. factory in a large way, is 95 cents. This is 30 cents higher than only a few months ago, and it looks like even higher prices.

AMONG THE TRADE.

This paper made a fool mistake last week when it said that the Frank A. Smith Co. had moved to 311 Bourse. It should have said to the Lafayette Building. There was not the slightest excuse for this.

At a meeting of the Grocers' and Importers' Exchange held on Wednesday at the Philadelphia Bourse, the following nominations were made for officers and directors: President, Wm. T. Kirk, Jr.; first vice-president, Marvin M. Eavenson; second vice-president, John S. Engart; treasurer, Alexander Henry; secretary, John E. Poore; directors, Frank Halpen, Ellsworth L. Posey, Wm. J. Young, H. A. N. Daily, J. P. Warner, James P. Curry, George Anderson, Wm. J. McCahan, Jr., Samuel R. Carter, G. Howard Shriver, Cooper Jessup, Robert Stewart, Wm. H.

Mechling, Samuel R. Sharp, Truman L. Palmer, Max Pinkus, George Lippincott, Rosser P. Birdsong, A. Lincoln Acker, A. R. Cavanna, Charles F. Bonsor, John C. Danenhowe, Eyre Mercier, George Nowland, Alan Levin. The annual meeting will be held on January 12, 1916, when the election will occur.

Government Pushing Tilefish, a New Food Fish Now Being Introduced By Dealers.

Over a Hundred and Fifty Thousand Pounds Landed in New York City. Using Vessels That Have Formerly Been Idle and Providing New Food for Consumers.

Special Correspondence of "Modern Merchant and Grocery World."

Washington, D. C.,

December 9, 1915.

An effort is being made by wholesale dealers in several of the large markets to introduce a new fish called tilefish. Restaurants and cafes are also serving it in various forms. The United States Bureau of Fisheries is really behind this campaign.

By the end of November there were eight vessels actively engaged in catching tilefish, and they had landed in New York 10 fares, aggregating 156,500 pounds of tilefish. In the last two days of the month six schooners landed 106,500 pounds.

Five of the vessels belong to the fleet formerly fishing out of New York, and three are from Boston, but all are landing their catch at the former city, and most of them would normally be idle at this period of the year. The exploitation and development of this fishery therefore provides for the economic use of an expensive plant at a time when otherwise it would be unproductive and the lucrative employment of labor which under previously existing conditions often would be idle.

In addition to the industrial results, a new and excellent animal food has been placed within reach of the consumer, and the presentation of this phase of the subject will be continued as the supply of tilefish becomes more nearly equal to the demand already created.

Goods That Are Being Advertised to Your Customers

"Modern Merchant and Grocery World" Makes Compilation of Products for Which Demand is Being Created Through Leading Periodicals. Papers and Magazines Used as Basis Cover Entire Country.

[The compilation which appears below is the result of more thinking along a line which was given some discussion several months ago, viz., the advantage to the retailer of keeping posted as to what products are being advertised to his customers, so that he may get the benefit of such advertising, if the product is for other reasons a desirable one to sell. The list here presented includes practically every leading magazine and periodical, and products that are not advertised in at least some of them are hardly advertised in this way at all, although they may be in newspapers or in direct ways, such as sampling, demonstrating, etc.]

This Is a New Thought

Here's something else about the specialty stamps which hasn't been mentioned yet: The American Specialty Manufacturers' Association, which directly or indirectly both of the stamps represent, is working busily to establish a new business code which will allow the manufacturer, the jobber and the retailer to live in peace and friendliness, each one carefully refraining from doing anything which will injure the others.

You must be in sympathy with that. All the concerns that use the above stamps are members of the American Specialty Manufacturers' Association or are working with it. Show your sympathy with the cause—and at the same time protect yourself, by signing only orders bearing one or the other of the above stamps.

The Grocery Markets

Tea.

The tea market is quite active. Importers who have good stocks report steady regular demand at full prices. No change has occurred in values during the week and none is immediately in sight. There has been some loss of Ceylons by sinking of ships and this has tended to make the London market, which has been rather weak, a little firmer, but has not caused any actual change in prices as yet.

Coffee.

The undertone of the market for Rio and Santos coffee is heavy and it is by no means unlikely that prices will decline in the near future. This refers principally to Santos, which remains unchanged for the week. Rio 7s are fairly steady, being relatively not so abundant. There is plenty of coffee around and the general feeling is not especially strong for the near future. Milds are firm and are ruling on such a comparatively high basis that they may not go higher. The demand is fair. Java and Mocha unchanged; fairly active.

Sugar.

The sugar market continues to present an appearance of squeezing, owing to the lack of raw sugar on spot. The week closed, however, somewhat easier. The Cuban crop promises to be much larger than last year, but it can hardly be available in large quantity for a month or six weeks, and until it is available there will be a very decided scarcity of raw sugar on the spot. Raw sugar sold during the week at as high as 5.39 cents, but the week closes around 5.02 cents. The only chance of getting raw sugar for our immediate wants is from Cuba. Refined granulated sugar is about unchanged for the week, almost all the refiners asking 6.15 cents. Domestic beet granulated sugar is playing a very important part in the market this year. If it were not for that, prices would be very materially higher. Refiners of beet granulated had a larger crop of beet sugar this year than last and they are making enormous profits. Beet granulated is quoted up to 5.95 in the East. The consumptive demand for sugar is poor.

Fish.

There has been no change in the fish market during the week. Mackerel is still very scarce and very high; demand light. Cod, hake and haddock are unchanged; fair demand. Salmon of all grades remains as it was a week ago; demand moderate. Domestic sardines are about unchanged on last week's basis. Imported sardines still scarce and high.

Syrup and Molasses.

On account of the advancing corn market glucose advanced ten points during the week, and compound syrup is firm in sympathy. Sugar syrup shows no particular change. Prices are still comparatively high and the demand light. The supply of all grades of molasses, except the very cheapest, will this year be seriously curtailed. The Louisiana sugar crop to begin with was much less than usual, and refiners are cutting all the sugar out of their syrup, which reduces the available supply of fine molasses. High grade New Orleans molasses is now bringing about 4 cents per gallon above normal.

Canned Goods.

The tomato market shows a further advance, and Maryland 3s, standards, f. o. b. factory, cannot now be obtained under 95 cents in a large way. The publication of the figures covering pack of 1915 have greatly strengthened the situation. The demand is fair. Corn is unchanged from a week ago; demand fair. It develops that this year's pack of peas was about a million cases more than last year's. The market is heavy and dull. Apples are unchanged and quiet. California canned goods are moving sluggishly from first hands, although in fair demand from second hands. Prices unchanged. Small Eastern staple canned goods unchanged and dull.

Dried Fruits.

Prunes are a little easier in the East, as second hands holders are still offering them at a shade below the Coast market. The Coast is about unchanged. Peaches and apricots show no change for the week; demand light and prices firm. Raisins are unchanged and quiet. Currants are extremely scarce and begin to show signs of disappearing from the market. Prices are very high and firm. Fard dates are pretty well cleaned up and are bringing about a cent above the opening. They are unusually scarce, although there are plenty of Halloween dates.

Beans and Peas.

Pea beans are still high and firm, prices being about unchanged from a week ago. Marrows are about unchanged, although they may be just a shade easier and cheaper. The market is still high, however. California limas are a little firmer on the Coast but unchanged in Eastern markets. Green and Scotch peas unchanged and dull.

Butter.

The make of butter is very light and the market is firm with a good consumptive demand. Prices show an advance of 1 cent per pound during the week. The quality of the butter now arriving is good for the season, and the situation is generally healthy. The trade look for continued good consumptive demand with prices about unchanged. Under grades of butter are in fair demand at proportionate values.

Eggs.

Fresh eggs are a cent a dozen higher for the week and with a good consumptive demand. The storage eggs are steady and unchanged with a moderate demand. Receipts of new laid eggs are very light and are being absorbed on arrival.

Cheese.

The cheese market is very firm at an advance of $\frac{1}{4}$ cent a pound. The consumptive demand is good. There is some export trade also, which helps to strengthen the situation. The receipts of cheese are light, as the factories are mostly closed for the season. The outlook is rather firm and if there is any change it probably will be slightly upward.

Provisions.

Everything in smoked meats is steady and unchanged with a light consumptive demand. Pure lard is unchanged in price, but firm; demand fair. Compound shows an advance of $\frac{1}{4}$ cent, due to the large demand for cottonseed oil. Barreled pork, dried beef and canned meat are all steady and unchanged.

INDIVIDUAL MARKET REPORTS

Imported Fish Specialties.

There is little to be reported in the herring market. Owing to the extraordinarily high prices prevailing this season, herrings are selling in a hand-to-mouth way only, but are selling nevertheless. The catch of milk and roe herrings has just started in Norway as we are advised by cable by our agents, and prospects for the fishing are said to be very good, as a much larger number of fishing boats are engaged in the catch this season than usual. At the same time, even if the catch should be very large, there is sure to be an extraordinarily large demand, principally from the countries now at war. Prices for herrings ruling in Norway this season have been twice and three times as high as in ordinary seasons. For the reason the Norwegian Government has just decided to put an export duty on herrings of all kinds, the revenue of which is intended to be used in such way as to enable the Norwegian population to buy herrings for home consumption at a more reasonable figure. The export duties on herrings are as follows: Fat herrings, kr. 4.00, equal to $1.12 per barrel. Milk and roe herring, kr. 1.50, equal to 42 cents per barrel. Spring herrings, kr. 1.00, equal to 25 cents per barrel.

No export duty is to be collected on Iceland herrings, but stocks of those are very nearly exhausted in Norway.

During the past week nothing has been added to the stock of Portuguese, French and Norwegian sardines, and the enormously high prices now prevailing for these commodities prevent the import thereof. The winter fishing of sardines in Norway has just started but so far has given practically no results. At the same time we are informed by our agents in Norway that the demand for canned sardines from the countries now at war has somewhat abated, and it is therefore hoped that if the winter fishing should turn out to be good, that prices will become somewhat more reasonable, although of course we cannot reckon with low prices this season. Stocks here are very much depleted and new supplies are badly needed, but will not be brought over unless prices are more reasonable. The trade here seriously objects to paying those extremely high prices. Portuguese and French, which are in scarce supply, are held at high prices and are in very few first hands; in fact, just a little spurt on the part of buyers.

ould clean the market thoroughly very tickly.

Government to Re-open Question Whether Cased Hams and Bacon Are in Package Forms.

hearing Announced for February 2 to Reconsider the Question, Although Government Has Always Taken the Position That They Need Not Be Labelled as Package Goods.

Special Correspondence of "Modern Merchant and Grocery World."

Washington, D. C.,

December 9, 1915.

A hearing on the question whether single hams and single sides of bacon which are wrapped covered with paper, cloth or gelatin are "in package form" will be held in the Bureau of Chemistry, 6 B street, S. W., Washington, D. C., at 2 P. M., February 2, 1916. The net weight amendment to the Federal Food and Drugs Act provides that an article of food in package form shall be considered misbranded within the meaning of the act if the quantity of the contents is not plainly marked on the outside of the package. The Department of Agriculture has already expressed the opinion that hams and single sides of bacon covered, as is customary in the trade, with paper, cloth or gelatin are not "in package form" within the meaning of the amendment. This opinion has been published as Opinion 17 in Service and Regulatory Announcements No. 6 of the Bureau of Chemistry, issued July 17, 1914. It was also embodied in a circular letter from the Bureau of Animal Industry dated September 1, 1914, issued for the guidance of inspectors at packing establishments throughout the country.

Recently the Department has received requests for a reconsideration of this question and a public oral hearing on the matter has been set for February 2d. All interested in the subject are invited to attend the hearing and make such representations as they desire. Those who are unable to attend in person may submit their views in writing. Such communications should be addressed to the Chief of the Bureau of Chemistry, United States Department of Agriculture, Washington, D. C.

The Disappearing Store Loafer.

A writer on the disappearing store loafer has the following to say about the efforts of country merchants to get rid of them:—

This store loafer is an old-time subject with the writer. Something like a year ago I called at the country store of a regular customer. His wife, a neat little old lady, was scrubbing around the stove that morning and was not in as pleasant frame of mind as usual. She stopped her work long enough to shake hands and tell her troubles. She always kept an empty tobacco caddy behind the stove, newly filled with ashes each morning, for a cuspidor, but allowed that she would be obliged to get something larger, as some of the tobacco chewers couldn't see that one. Before I left the store that morning I printed a good, plain, loud sign that read, "Look in this box and Spit Where You Look." Later on she told me it had proved a winner, as everyone smiled and took a tumble that it meant him.

I have in mind a good old customer who has a sign behind the stove where stands a large spittoon that reads, "Spit on the Floor and I'll Mop It Up, but Trade Here." This customer told me that that sign worked bully and that he hadn't been obliged to mop out in two years.

I call to mind another sign in the store of F. G. DeHart, at Vickeryville, that reads:—

Enormous Cuban Sugar Crop Will Bring Prices Down When It is Available. Five-and-Ten Cent Stores Now Selling Meats. Market Summary.

Special Correspondence of "Modern Merchant and Grocery World."

New York, December 10, 1915.

Considerable excitement was engendered here by the publication during the week of the latest report by an authority on the Cuban sugar crop which is about to be harvested. A well known Havana sugar buyer placed it at 3,175,000 tons, which is an enormous production. Last year it was 600,000 tons less than this. Unusually heavy planting is said to be the cause together with the making of new arrangements for grinding more cane than could be done before. It is generally admitted that as soon as this enormous crop becomes available for the trade of this country prices will decline. At present, however, there is of course none of this sugar available and it probably will not become available for at least a month. The prospect is being discounted somewhat, however, and the market closes the week somewhat easier.

A move which is certainly a sensational revolution has been made by one of the 5-and-10-cent store concerns, which are operating chains of these establishments in large cities of the East. The move is to put meat in these stores, and that has been done in New York City already. About half a dozen 5-and-10-cent stores have offered meat for sale within the week at 5 and 10 cents per pound, or half pound, as the case may be. It is undoubtedly the most sensational development in the 5-and-10-cent store proposition that has ever been made.

Commissioner Jos. Hardigan, Chief of the local Weights and Measures Department, has evolved a new scheme of enforcing the net weight law. Its important features are as follows:—

1. The Bureau will send out to dealers in every kind of merchandise, retail, wholesale and manufacturers, a circular calling attention to the existence of the law and a copy of the law itself, with instructions that he may obtain further information if desired at the offices of the Bureau.

2. The inspector who examines merchandise in a store and finds that it does not comply with the net weight container law will leave with the merchant a circular, inviting him to call at the Bureau to explain the presence of improperly marked goods in his stock. There will be no compulsory attendance. The dealer must come voluntarily. But if he fails to appear at the time specified his absence will be taken as indicating that he violated the law intentionally, and prosecution will follow. Four offices in different boroughs will be used for this examination work, and advice will be given as to how dealers may meet the law's requirements.

3. In addition to these two features, the plan will include an educative campaign through a course of lectures, in which an effort will be made to point out to dealers that by marking their merchandise properly they will be the gainers, as well as will their consumers. The chief advantage which will develop for them will be that they will no longer sell blindly, as at present, but will know exactly what they are distributing.

This plan has evoked a great deal of favorable comment, inasmuch as it appears to be aimed to prevent violations of the law rather than to allow a merchant to make violations and then prosecute him.

SUMMARIZED MARKET CONDITIONS.

Tea quiet, largely on account of the holiday season; prices unchanged.—Coffee dull and about unchanged on last week's basis. Milds quiet without feature.—Sugar very nervous and unsettled. The raw market has touched 5.49, but closes the week a shade off. Refiners are quoting 6.15 for granulated. The general feeling not quite so strong.—Tomatoes firm and show an advance of about 5 cents per dozen for Maryland 3s. Pack figures are responsible. Corn, peas and other canned goods unchanged. Canned salmon unchanged and quiet. Domestic sardines steady to firm. Fair seasonable demand.—Spot prunes continue to be easy on account of second hands selling below Coast basis. The Coast market unchanged and quiet. Other dried fruits unchanged with most lines strong. Raisins the only exception.—Wheat closes at a decline for a somewhat fluctuating week.—Flour in light demand and weaker.

CORRESPONDENCE.

Mr. Heffner and the State Association's Endorsement of Him for Public Service Commissioner.

Lock Haven, Pa., Dec. 4, 1915.
To the Editor.

Dear Sir:—I have read with considerable interest your article in the "Modern Merchant and Grocery World" regarding my endorsement by the State Merchants' Association for the vacancy on the Public Service Commission.

As you were evidently not in possession of all the facts in the case when you published that article, I would ask that you give the following your earnest consideration, and if possible that you give us your support in our fight for recognition of the business interests of the State on this very important Commission.

In the first place I do not need the job, as I have built up a business here, which has earned me for ten years or more a remuneration equal to the salary paid these Commissioners. Under the circumstances my accepting this position if it is tendered to me would be a considerable sacrifice, as it would necessitate giving up my business into which I have put twenty years of hard work, and would take me away from my home for three or four days of every week.

I am a candidate for this position for the following reasons: First, because I believe that my experience in business and in civic affairs here would enable me to render efficient service to the people of this State. Second, because I believe that the business interests of this State are large enough and are effected so much by the work of this Commission that they are entitled to representation on it. Third, I have been at the head of my profession in this State, at the head of different organizations and movements here for the betterment of this section, and believe that this position would afford me an opportunity for advancement that I could not hope to obtain in any other way.

Now, Mr. Buckley, you must appreciate the full force of the old saying that "a house divided against itself must fall," and as you are one of the big association men of the State, and representative of a very influential element in our work, I would like to have you with us in this fight.

I would be pleased to have you investigate my record, and if you find me worthy would like to have you write the Governor favoring my appointment on this Commission.

I am sending you in this mail copy of proceedings of the Pennsylvania Pharmaceutical Association for last year, during which time served as president, and I am also enclosing memorandum covering my qualifications.

I am looking forward to meeting you personally on my next visit to Philadelphia, and with fraternal regards I wish to remain,

EDGAR F. HEFFNER.

This letter is called out by editorial comment in a recent issue upon the request of Secretary A. M. Howes, of the Pennsylvania Retail Merchants' Association, that ever local secretary in the State wire the Governor endorsing Edgar F. Heffner, of Lock Haven, Pa., for Public Service Commissioner. The paper said this at the time:—

Now Edgar F. Heffner may be the best man in Pennsylvania for this job and he may be the worst. Certainly some of the secretaries who are asked to endorse him will not know which. It is just possible that none may know which. Suppose they thus inadvertently endorse an utterly unfitted man—is the position of the organized retail merchant improved with the Governor of the State?

No organization ought to take a stand with one candidate unless it knows all about all the candidates.

In his letter Mr. Heffner makes out a pretty good case for himself. He seems to be a man well fitted for the position. But he should not have been called on to give this information about himself, which he now have for the first time. The State Secretary should have given it when he asked local secretaries for their support.

Burk's Fresh Sausage

Composed entirely of selected tender pieces of pork, not the ordinary trimmings commonly used. Not cheapened in price and quality by the addition of tripe, boiled rice and sundry substitutes. Correctly seasoned, not offensive to sensitive stomachs because of pungent herbs. Nutritious. In four styles—hashed fine and coarse, linked and in straight casings.

Burk's Philadelphia Scrapple

Prepared from the very best materials—good, wholesome meats and extra fine corn meal. Well boiled and seasoned to suit the most critical. Not to be compared with some cheap products of doubtful hues and colors. Burk's eats as good as it looks. Superior to farmers' products. In pans of 15 pounds each.

Burk's Pig Souse

is a seasonable specialty prepared fresh daily, in pans of five pounds each. The jelly is clear and transparent and free from vegetable gelatines and ill-smelling glue stock. Contains plenty of meat and garnished with slices of lemon and parsley.

Proves attractive when turned out of the pan, and is a quick seller, saving the consumer the trouble of cooking pig's feet, so difficult to obtain at this season of the year.

Burk's Liver Pudding

Of the usual "Burk" standard—clean and unadulterated. Rich in quality and an excellent dish when fried, or, after removing the casing, hashed with potatoes. In rings of 1 pound each.

Merry Christmas, Friends.

Merry Christmas and much obliged for what you sent me last Christmas and what I suppose you're going to send me this Christmas.

My address for presents will be the same as last year, the Ritz-Carlton. Those what bring their presents come right in the front way. If any of them flunkers try to stop you, soak 'em one. Come right on up to my room without taking off your rubbers.

Those what send their presents will please pay the freight in advance. I'll never forget that barrel of potatoes I got from California last year. The freight was $11.96. The potato market was $3.75 or something like that. I ain't got much taste for gold-plated potatoes.

Don't send any fur coats, as I've got seven from last year. I'd just as soon you wouldn't send any animals, either. I've got enough animals in my own family. Animals eat too much.

Last year some fellow that didn't like my face sent me an animal that I thought was an Angora cat. It turned to be a cat all right, but not an Angora. It was a pole cat. That was one hen of a joke, that was.

Funny thing about that pole cat. I wished it on to somebody else and after a little while it married an ordinary cat. Heaven was good to 'em and they had eight kittens, all born with the little squirt guns that pole cats have. The fellow I gave it to, said those four kittens got so they would sit on the fence and yowl and dare people to come and move 'em off.

I stayed over night with a cousin of mine last week. He's in the grocery business—got a little store in a busy place of about 146 people. Some stir when the last mail gets in, believe me—everybody turns out.

Me and him got to talking about Christmas and giving Christmas presents to customers. He got into it a couple of years ago—gave a little picture with a calendar on it—cost him $50. Last year he cut it out and got some slurs thrown at him, though it didn't cost him any business, for he's got the only store in the village. Ain't it great to be in that position? Gee!

He was wondering what to do this year. I told him I wouldn't do a thing. The more you give people the more they expect you to give 'em. He was going over some of the nuts that he had among his customers.

"If I could really give some of my customers what I'd like them to have," he said, "I could die happy, but I feel they wouldn't stand for what I want to give them."

"What d'ye mean?" I said. Then he told me of some of the fool stunts some of 'em did.

"All right," I said, when he'd finished, "take that old cuss that always pokes his fingers in the meat." He had an old farmer with skinny fingers about six inches long and smelling of horse and cow with a dash of dog. His way of sizing up meat was to stick one of those ten-penny-nail fingers into it in about six places. Sometimes he'd buy it and sometimes he wouldn't.

"Take that old cuss," I said. "I'd hire some big brute and tell him not to cut his forefinger nail for two or three weeks. When it was about an inch long I'd have him file it to a point; then I'd give him a dollar to hold the old farmer up some night, cut a hole in his shirt and poke that finger nail into his ribs hard fifty times.

"Take the old maid with the nose," I went on. Another one of his curiosities was an old girl that always came in the store in winter time with a drop on the end of her nose. He caught his two clerks betting one day on whether it would drop while she was in the store.

The fellow that bet it would, won the bet. It dropped while she was leaning over a box of crackers. Oh me! Oh, my! Mostly it drops, although once in a while, after she's been practicing, she manages to hold it until she gets out. But the worry over whether it'll drop or not, and if so, where, he said was something fierce. I can believe it, too.

"Give her a little pink nose bag," I said. "She could tie it fast to her ears. It could have a little sponge inside and would be real convenient. Besides saving the stock."

There was another woman he told me about. Everybody hated to see her come in the store, for she talked so fast and so blamed loud that business had to stop till she'd went out.

"You could give her a canton flannel mouth gag," I said, "or a little calendar with something like this printed on it: 'My trouble is that I talk too blamed much. If I don't learn to keep shut somebody will kill me.'"

"Every one useful," I said, "and calculated to help business. Wouldn't cost much, either."

"My trade aren't all that way," he said, "everybody has some bad eggs among his customers. If I had my way I'd give some of my people—one old lady in particular—a crown of gold. She's a saint if ever there was one. This whole year she's been buying stuff for people who are poorer than she is. I know she can't afford it—all she's got is a widow's pension and one little property here in town. I'd give her something real."

"Well, go to it," I said, "that's the kind of people ought to get Christmas presents." So they are too. If I could do it I'd never give a blamed thing to the hairpin that expects it and gets sore if he don't get it. All he ought to get on Christmas morning is a nickel worth of ice.

Selling Talks With Clerks

BY A MAN WHO HAS BEEN ONE

Conducted by W. E. SWEENEY, Manager for L. Lehman & Co.'s Department Food Store, Dover, N. J.

From 7 Till 6.—These are the working hours, Saturday excepted, of the modern grocery clerk. Not many years ago it was 7 (sometimes 6) till 8, 9, 10 and Saturdays midnight. Even at that, some of us managed to get through a couple of books a month.

If that could be done in the days of all work and no play, what can't you accomplish with from 15 to 18 hours a week additional spare time?

Spend just one hour an evening on history alone, and at the end of a year you will have gained an education that will broaden and brighten your life and that will attract to you the friendship and high regard of men and women in whose company you will meet refinement and in whose conversation and example, knowledge and inspiration.

It's pitiable to see the time wasted by young fellows after business hours—aimless street wandering, pool playing, attending cheap, silly shows, setting around a cigar store. Such habits are not only stupid, but they're sinful—sinful because the brain which Divine mind decreed for you is capable of vast development.

It's like folding a bag or wrapping a bundle or folding back a sack of nuts the first time you tried to do these things you made a bungling job of it but you kept on and on until your work represented neatness and expertness.

Thus the brain. We must command it. It's there for that purpose and it's a wonderfully willing servant.

Never muddle it or contort it with booze. It's about as easy to get to heaven on the devil's back as get ahead in life with the whiskey habit.

If you have a good job and you are hitting it up on the quiet, it won't be long before you'll have all the time you want—and more, to swap stories with the bartender.

This writer knows what it means to be in and out of the depths.

Does This Mean Cream of Wheat?

Wheat and Flour Man Buys Package of Wheat Breakfast Food, Probably Cream of Wheat, and Finds That Consumer Who Pays Fifteen Cents for it is Paying for Wheat at Thirty-two Dollars Per Bushel, While the Farmer Gets Eighty Cents.

Some reference has been made in past issues to the enormously profitable business of the Cream of Wheat Co. which, as exposed in a recent New York court trial, has been doing nothing more than packing wheat middlings in cartons under a fancy name. Though the grocer, even at the full price of Cream of Wheat, makes practically no profit whatever, the company is one of the most sensational and profitable in the United States. We do not know that the following, which is an extract from a letter appearing in the "American Farmer" refers to Cream of Wheat, but we suspect that it does:—

Let us go to the grocery store, so that as the shutters are taken down, we get something as a breakfast. We do go and we point to a beautifully done up package, quite fancy and all that, and we pay fifteen cents, and not noting the lightness of the package, because of the other items in the paper bag, we arrive home. "Just for this we carefully weigh contents, of the carton (so neat—even empty) and we find that we have paid for our 15 cents just four and a half ounces of a wheat breakfast food. And at our leisure, over our breakfast, we take our pencil and do some figuring, and the more we figure the more we feel as if we had been Fletcherizing the real, green dollar bill fabric, per pound for our breakfast. Four and a half ounces of wheat for 15 cents at the rate of 3 1/3 cents per ounce, gives us a cost of 53.34 cents per pound, and again, at the rate of 10 cents per bushel, the total is about as close to $32 per bushel as figures can go. Figure it for yourself—4 1/2 ounces of any wheat breakfast food for 15 cents, 60 pounds of wheat to the bushel, and it will land up against $32 per bushel for the wheat you are eating. Normally, presuming that the wheat used was No. 1 Northern, or Durum, the farmer gets 80 cents per bushel for that wheat at the elevator and, deducting this 80 cents from the grocer's price over the counter, we have $31.20 per bushel to divide up along the "mid-western route." In other words, we have an 80-cent-per-bushel cause at the elevator, and a $32-per-bushel at the grocery store. Life is so short to figure out who gets the share of the $32 per bushel, somebody gets it, that's sure certain. Did it all go to the grocer, not so many of them would be in the hands of the retailers to-day. There is plenty to go around to satisfy all the middlemen in the transaction, 4,000 per cent advance on the initial price at the elevator.

We can tell this correspondent that he got the $32 per bushel, provided he means Cream of Wheat—the Cream of Wheat Co. got it. The grocer got almost none of it; even at 15 cents he just about came out whole.

The "American Miller's" correspondent closes with a sage observation:—

If the tarnal fools of a public wants to pay 15 cents for 4 1/2 ounces of wheat breakfast food, and worship the shades of old P. T. Barnum and enjoy being expensively fooled, it is up to the public.

But the fancy names and the fanciest prices tacked on to our modern sanitary package foods have much to do with the cost of higher living. The housewife evidently enjoys being fooled and especially when she pays 4,000 per cent. advance on wheat for her breakfast food that the farmer does not play even on, unless he can get 80 cents per bushel net for all he raises.

What I Think of the Ferris Letters.

Well, the Ferris letters have stopped, that is, that kind of letters have stopped. I'm in hopes they'll stay right along with us with another kind of advertising. I declare I'm real sorry to have those letters drop. I read every word of all of 'em and looked forward to getting the next. They were certainly the most peculiar advertising I ever saw, and I expect you'll say the same. At the start I wasn't sure they were going to amount to anything, but after a bit I changed. I can't see now how a retail grocer could read those monthly letters—you had to see 'em; you couldn't miss 'em, you know—without getting the idea that the Ferris people were pretty big, and that anything they sold was pretty sure to be away up in quality. If I'm right about that, those letters have been the best advertising they ever did or ever will do. Because the minute people make you feel that they're good big square high grade people, then's when you begin to want to deal with 'em. That's as sure as you're born.

I hope some of you fine fellows wrote the Ferris people about those letters and told them what you thought. If you did I'll be surer of holding their business.

No. 341.—When You Can Arrest a Customer for Passing a Bad Check.

In my judgment no phase of the law is more misunderstood than that brought forward by the following letter from a New York reader:—

As you will note from this letter-head, we are doing a jobbing, not a retail business. A considerable part of our business is done by our customers driving up to our store, buying what they want, paying spot cash for it and driving away. We have a special discount on most of our goods for the customer who does business in that way. Last week one of our customers came and got some goods and gave us a check on a Bronx bank. He had been dealing with us for about six months and had usually paid cash, though twice before he had given checks on the same bank, which had been paid. This check given last week came back marked not sufficient and we have not been able as yet to get him to make it good. Meanwhile he has our goods. Can we have him arrested?

Please also give advice on the following: We have salesmen out as well, and those salesmen will often bring back checks from customers when they have been told to collect an account. These checks will sometimes come back. What is our redress in such a case? Sometimes it is very aggravating. Can we legally threaten a man with arrest if he gives a check which comes back marked "N. S."?

I suppose every business house in the United States has precisely this experience. Sometimes a man who passes a check which afterward comes back unpaid can be arrested, and sometimes he cannot be. It is useful to know of the cases in which he can be, for often the threat of criminal prosecution is the only thing which will move the dead beat who has pulled somebody in on a worthless check. Tell him you will arrest him and he will move heaven and earth to get the money and pay you. Tell him you will sue him and he laughs.

The law draws a rather sharp line between the cases where a warrant can be issued, and the cases where it cannot be. I can probably make the distinction clear by some imaginary cases:—

First take the case cited by this correspondent. A goes to B and buys merchandise for cash, which he takes away with him. He pays for it by check which is returned marked insufficient. This may be false pretense or it may not be. It depends largely on whether A had an account at the bank on which the check was drawn. If the check was for $100, and A had an account with the bank, which on the day he gave the check had $10 in it, A would usually not be held criminally guilty and a proceeding to arrest him would in most cases fail. This because the law would say, "Well, he actually had an account there, and he might have intended to deposit enough to take care of the check before it was presented." But there are exceptions. If it could be shown that A had no reasonable expectation of depositing anything, and had never been led to believe by the bank that an overdraft check would be paid, then he might be found guilty of a criminal offense. But it would be hard work, if he had a regular account at the bank.

This would never be false pretense if A had reason to believe that the check, even if the funds in bank were insufficient, would be paid. Sometimes banks are so generous to depositors that they will unhesitatingly pay almost any check presented whether there are funds at the moment to meet it or not. A depositor who gave an overdraft check on a bank that had been doing this with him, would never be guilty of false pretense.

Now let me discuss the case of the man who gives a check on a bank in which he has no account. Usually he is guilty of false pretense—if he has gotten property for the check, or has had it cashed—and a warrant can issue for his arrest. That because the law will not admit that he could have had any reasonable expectation of opening an account before the check could be presented.

The law gives the maker of a worthless check the benefit of pretty nearly all the doubts in the case. For instance there was the case of another wholesale dealer who delivered some goods to a customer in exchange for a check which though it was dated that day, the customer asked him to hold for three days. The jobber thought he would be sharp and despite his promise he presented the check at once. It was refused payment because of insufficient funds, and the jobber had his customer arrested. The court said he had no right to do it, for the customer had promised to have the check paid not at once, but in three days.

It should be borne in mind that the mere giving of a bad check is not criminal, even a check on a bank where the maker never had an account. To make it criminal the maker must have gotten something by it. If he gets somebody to cash a bad check, it is criminal. If he buys something with a bad check and takes possession of what he buys, it is criminal. If he buys something on credit on January 1st, and on January 10th, or February 1st, tenders a check in payment which turns out to be bad, it is not criminal, because he got nothing for the check. His creditor still has his claim against him, and the debtor got nothing out of the transaction except perhaps a receipt, which won't do him the slightest good.

If I were a merchant and was in the habit of cashing checks for customers, or accepting checks for merchandise which was delivered before I could get the check cashed, I should ask everybody who

Becomes Operative Next January 1st, and Makes all Retail Merchants Within the State Liable for Accidents to Their Employees While Latter are at Work.

[Inasmuch as the new Pennsylvania Workmen's Compensation Law, which becomes operative next January 1st, affects every grocer and general storekeeper within the State, the "Modern Merchant and Grocery World" will publish from time to time some possible cases which may arise under it, in the experience of the average grocer or general storekeeper. A full digest of the act was published in the issue of July 26th last. Readers hereof will remember that it practically makes it compulsory for employers to pay damages to employees who meet with accidents in the course of their regular work.—Ed.]

Possible Case No. 12.

John Jones, a retail grocer, decides to have his back room painted. He employs Haines & Brown, painters, to do the work, and Haines & Brown send a painter named Smith to Jones' store. The painter sets to work, and while engaged in painting the back room, slips from a step ladder, falls and breaks his leg. He is disabled for six weeks. His wages are $17 per week.

Before the Workmen's Compensation act, Jones would not be liable to the painter for this accident, unless it could be shown that Jones was negligent and in that way caused the accident to happen. Under the new act, however, he and his insurance company will have to pay Smith one-half his wages, beginning two weeks after the accident and continuing until Smith can go to work. This unless Jones had posted a notice, before Smith came to work, that he would not be responsible for accidents happening to the employees of others. If he posted the notice, he was also obliged to notify the Bureau of Labor, Harrisburg, within ten days afterward and before any accident has happened. If he did this he is not liable.

Date.....

I hereby certify that I have on the above date on deposit with the Bank the sum of $..... to cover a check this day given to John Brown & Co. for and that there are no other checks out against said deposit, the payment of which would leave said fund insufficient to pay said check. This statement is made to induce John Brown & Co. to accept the said check for value.

(Signed).....

This is a very simple form, yet it could give the victim of a bad check the protection of a criminal in many cases where he could not otherwise have it. If a man who wanted cash or goods for a check signed this, and the check came back, and it was afterward found that he did not have the sum deposited which he said he did, he could be arrested without any question.

Question: Verling Harris, Washington, D. C.—Please give me your opinion on the following situation:—

A enters B's store selling a composition called Wearite, a powdered substance for treating roofs, etc. offers to sell B a small keg (B supposing it to be about 50 pounds, though no mention was made of quantity; it just being stated one keg) on consignment, stating he could have exclusive territory, could advertise for him, make deals, etc., (all this was verbal) and if he did not sell could return it,

A then presents a contract which is a very long affair printed in the letters. B signs same thus: "Hughes Bros.," without his first name, just Hughes Bros. When the stuff arrives it is over 400 pounds, a very large barrel. B immediately writes back and offers to pay freight and also pay freight back if they will release him from any obligation.

A's firm (The Great Lakes Refining Co. of Cleveland, Ohio) refuse to do this and now they threaten to sue B. What defense, if any, has B? Is the signature Hughes Bros. good? A did not leave B a copy of contract.

Answer.—The Great Lakes Refining Co. of Cleveland, Ohio, is well rated, both as to capital and credit.

This is another case of a buyer signing a contract without reading and waking up to find that it means something different from his idea. There is very little protection in the laws for such. To everything the victim in that position can say, the reply is: You should have read the paper before you signed it. If you had done that, this would not have happened.

To begin with, the signature "Hughes Brothers" is good if that is the firm name. The contract does not need to bear the partner's individual names.

The only controversy between you and the Great Lakes Co., judging from your letter, is as to the quantity. You thought a keg was 50 pounds, while it appears to be 400 pounds. Neither party mentioned the quantity while the deal was being negotiated. Your only argument is that "keg" is generally understood to mean a small cask or barrel; and that you had a right to expect in the absence of explanation, that that is what this would be. A package of 400 pounds is certainly not a small cask or barrel. There is some force in this argument, and my advice is to reject the barrel on the ground that you bought a keg. If the contract called for 400 pounds, however, you will have difficulty in explaining why you were in ignorance of the quantity.

I suppose the Great Lakes Co. also repudiates the other arrangement which the salesman made—as to return of unsold goods, etc. As to that, you will likely find in the contract the usual provision that verbal arrangements made by the salesman are not binding on the house.

I am afraid that if the Great Lakes Co. sues, there will be little chance for defense here.

NOTE.—Requests for information in this department should tersely set out in full all the facts bearing on the case, and all questions should be carefully framed to avoid misconstruction. Write on one side of the sheet only. Letters should be received at this office not later than Tuesday of each week, to ensure an answer in the Monday's issue following. The signature and address of the writer must accompany all inquiries, and will be published unless there is a request not to do so. All inquiries received will be answered without charge. Address all communications to Legal Editor, "Modern Merchant and Grocery World."

Pennsylvania Organization Notes.

The county convention called for Erie on November 30th was called off at the last moment. Just why we do not know.

The newly organized association at Wellsboro is doing things. H. L. Blatchley, an active member, has offered rooms over his store to be used as rest rooms for visitors. They will

What's In a Name?

The name of every National Biscuit Company product has a selling value to the grocer. Biscuit baked by us bear names persistently advertised and easily recalled—names backed by the highest baking skill.

Your customers know what to ask for by name if you carry N. B. C. goods. You do not have to explain or insist that "they're just as good," as does a grocer who sells an unknown kind.

You can see the advantage of selling the best biscuit baked. Grocers who sell National Biscuit Company products hold the most desirable trade in any community.

The association will provide free hitching yards and the help of these adjuncts to foster the community spirit, without which any town is at a disadvantage.

To top this off a community Christmas tree will be provided—lighted for one week, and on Christmas Eve there will be gifts for the children.

A Farm Bureau is also being arranged for.

WORKMEN'S COMPENSATION INSURANCE

S. H. POOL, Resident Manager

330 WALNUT STREET :: PHILADELPHIA, PA.

Many matters of importance were considered, chief of which was the arrangements made for mutual insurance of its members under the Workmen's Compensation Act.

A. M. Howes has resigned as managing secretary of the Erie Commercial Club by reason of ill health. He will retain his position as State Secretary, editor of "The Pennsylvania Merchant" and secretary of the Retailers' Mutual Insurance Company.

The death of P. M. Malloy, on November 29th will be sincerely regretted by all who knew him. He was a staunch, loyal association man and one of the standbys of the State Association.

Mr. Smedley was the guest of the Titusville Merchants' Association banquet on December 1st. About 100 merchants were present as guests of the association, all bills being paid out of surplus funds of the organization.

The dinner was a sumptuous one and the entertainment consisted of music by a good orchestra, singing by the Sydonel Quartette, songs by Thos. Burham and C. A. Connors.

The addresses were by Rev. Dr. Semple, Hon. Axtell L. Byles and William Smedley. President Hahn was toastmaster. The committee in charge consisted of Samuel Strouse, Frank Reid, Jacob Goldstein, Charles Snakard and Jacob Davis.

The Port Alleghany Association celebrated its anniversary with a banquet on December 1st. The Organizer was invited, but a conflict of dates prevented.

The Warren Business Men's Association held a meeting on December 2d, at which over 100 were present. The meeting was preceded by a luncheon given in the parlors of the Y. M. C. A. Building. President C. H. Mott acted as toastmaster and toasts were responded to by A. F. Kotcamp, secretary Y. M. C. A.; Attorney Jno. Siggins, Secretary Hazeltine, of the local Board of Trade, and William Smedley. It was an interesting meeting. Warren business men are a fine lot of men and believing in organization, support it properly. J. F. Emmerson, the efficient secretary, devotes his entire time to the work of the organization.

Dry Goods Business Shows Handsome Increase.

Marshall Field & Co., in their weekly review of the dry goods trade, say:—

Current wholesale distribution of dry goods shows a handsome increase over the corresponding period of a year ago.

Improved retail demand and low stocks brought merchants to market in large numbers.

Road orders for both immediate and future delivery are in considerable advance of previous years.

Collections are about normal. Prices are firm.

Dear Sir:—Inclosed find a proof of the page ad. we carried in our county paper last week.

By J. D. Bail.

The page advertisement enclosed was copiously illustrated and is reproduced in much reduced size:—

this kind exclusively, I don't believe they are getting the returns from their advertising expenditures which they ought to get. To begin with, let's take the illustrations. Most of them don't mean a thing. They have a general but no specific application. The boy's overcoat at the top of the last column ought to have appeared as an illustration of a particular coat. The picture, the description and the price—of that coat. It has no point at all used as it is used now. The same can be

In my judgment this advertising can be made very much more useful by using the illustrations as have suggested. The cut ought to be a picture of some article you can advertise as a leader. It should be followed by a complete description of the article, and can be followed, if you like, by something like, "We have others just as good value; witness these:" This advertising would then offer a series of leaders, pictured and described instead of a series of price-lists. I consider most of these illustrations just as pointless as a picture of an oyster would be at the head of the "Fresh oysters" paragraph.

If I were the Medford people I would let up a little on the price list style of advertising. Their advertising is now practically a price-list. I have never known a price-list advertising to have lasting, substantial success. If prices are low enough they will get some people in of course, but isn't all advertising is supposed to do. When you advertise by price list alone you say to the public "the only reason we can give to deal here is our prices, we appear herewith." That is a dangerous position for a merchant to put himself into.

NOTE.—This department is devoted to the criticism of advertising matter in, to the devising of new advertising ideas for special occasions, upon request and to the suggesting of original advertisements when data is supplied. Communications sent for this Department should be addressed to the Editor of Science of Advertising. They will be taken up in strict rotation.

A LONG in the fall of the year a feeling comes over us that we have had a pretty good year, crops have been as good as could be expected, our wages have been raised or a relative died and left us some money, or some other little thing has happened to make us feel like we have a little extra money to spend. As we have laid in thousands and thousands of dollars worth of merchandise more this year than ever before, and our prices have been reduced to nearly cost, you can't select a better place to buy than Medford Bargain Store.

Cocoas as Good as Ours

Take the average cocoa on the market and carry it through another process or two, and you may have an article about as good as Croft's Swiss Milk Cocoa.

The trouble is that other manufacturers will not use that "other process or two," because of its cost. They prefer to send out their product half made, as it were—containing indigestible and ill-tasting ingredients which should have been eliminated—so they can save a little on the cost of making.

Croft's Swiss Milk Cocoa has everything taken out that should be taken out, and for that reason, among others, it has the smoothest, finest flavor of any cocoa made.

Will you mention the "Modern Merchant and Grocery World" when you write?

Coffee Peddler Exists Because of Joint Fault of Retail Grocer and Unintelligent Roaster

No Standard of Price or Quality. The Real Place of Private Brands in the Fight Against Cheap Peddling Competition. Contributor Thinks They Have No Weight Whatever.

There is altogether too much agitation on the peddler coffee question. Particularly is this so for these striving times. The roaster, the grocer, the coffee shark and the peddler are continually striving for the business.

At the present stage of operations, the roaster and the grocer are engaged in trying to place the blame on each other. The grocer and the roaster are both wasting time and allowing the shark and peddler to sell the coffee.

We will eliminate the coffee shark from this argument, for his methods are so crooked and dishonest that he soon hangs himself. He buys only one grade of coffee (the cheapest) from the cheapest of cut price roasters, and sells it from 12½ to 40 cents a pound, according to what the customer is used to paying the dealer.

Now consider the roaster. Where do you find one that is honest with himself? He is so afraid that his competitor will sell a pound or two of coffee that he is really unable to establish a selling price and stick to it. In the first place he does not know what his coffee costs him to put on the market. When he sends his salesmen out to sell his coffee he gives them what would be termed a legitimate selling price, then as he fears his competitor will sell a pound of coffee, he immediately gives his salesmen several provisos, in the shape of special and inside discounts, in order that his salesmen can cut the ground from under his competitor. Such price cutting demoralizes the coffee business, for the next competitor's salesman has yet another inside price and so on.

Now, what can be expected of the fair-minded grocer? He gets sore and begins to wonder. He is loaded up with fifteen or twenty brands, both bulk and package, and from his viewpoint the end is not yet.

No coffee roaster fears honest competition, for costs are costs the world over. Any roaster whose establishment is managed by men who know, never cuts and slashes prices, for his cost sheets are accurately figured out and his selling price must be a certain figure—if he cuts that price he is losing money, and he has brains enough to know that he must have his legitimate profit or quit.

Not so with our brainless wonder. He cuts and slashes and if given enough rope finds out too late that he is out of business.

At this stage of the game the peddler enters, selling coffee right to the grocer's customers.

What does our grocer do now? He at once gets busy—with the roaster—and complains that there is another peddler in his locality.

Our brainless wonder of a roaster tickles himself under the chin and tells Mr. Grocer to cut his price for a certain week and his problem is solved. The grocer tries it, and from any manner in which he can figure it, he has lost money.

At last a bright idea hits him. It is bright, for the brilliant salesman told him so. His Private Brand—that's it. He will put out his own brand of coffee. Put all other grocers out of business as far as coffee is concerned. Our cheap roaster will gladly put up his cheapest coffee in a fancy package, and Mr. Grocer will soon be independent. On paper it looks great—and it is great—for the peddler.

The new Private Brand is placed on the shelves and the next natural thing for our grocer friend to do is to get out his hammer. The anvil chorus rings on all but the Private Brand. The time-tried and true standard brands are hammered into nothingness. In the meantime—where has the coffee trade gone? The peddler has it. How did he get it? The grocer can find out by asking his former patrons, if he has nerve enough to do so.

The competitive grocer around the corner is still in the coffee business. He is pushing a standard brand, the price and high quality of which are always the same. Yes, his trade is gradually increasing.

Now Mr. Grocer, isn't this about the condition?

The peddler question as it looks from the inside-out as well as from the outside-in, is clearly a problem for you, Mr. Grocer. If the peddler's methods are cutting into your business, there must be some merit to his methods. If he gives premiums you can give premiums. You can give the same or even better. Your percentage of profit is greater than any through whose hands the coffee passes, including the grower, the shipper, the broker or the roaster. If the peddler's service is better than yours why are you asleep at the switch?

You have that peddler skinned a mile. Your prestige in your neighborhood with a complete line of groceries enables you to go that peddler one better at any game he wishes to play.

A little team work between grocers and clerks would do wonders. It would place the coffee trade in the channel where it belongs in a very short time.

Cut out your price cutting—your throat cutting—your private brands—your substitutions and go to it.

Packers Inclined to Make an Issue Out of Adding Cereal to Sausage.

Begin Campaign Which Seems Intended to Prove That Present Policy of the Law to Sharply Restrict Use of Cereal in Sausage is a Mistake, That Cereal Makes Sausage Both Better and Cheaper. Armour & Co. Fire First Gun.

For some reason which has not yet been disclosed, the big Chicago packers are beginning to wage a campaign in defense of the use of cereal in sausage. The present policy of the law is not to allow that, except under sharp restrictions, for in the past unscrupulous manufacturers have loaded their sausage with cereal because cereal cost less than meat, and also because it absorbed a lot of water. They would add this water and thus get paid for cereal and water at the price of meat.

The packers are now claiming, through articles which they are producing and circulating over the country, that there should be a change in the law; that because some manufacturers have abused cereal, is no reason why the honest use of cereal should be forbidden; and that a certain percentage of cereal actually improves sausage.

A portion of an article written by H. B. Bogg, of Armour & Co.'s fresh meat department, is here reproduced:—

Objection to the use of cereal in sausage appears to men who have spent their lives in the study of meat packing to be without sufficient basis. There is no doubt that a better sausage in every way can be made by the use of cereal in one form or another.

The fact that cereals are cheaper than meat, that cereals will absorb and hold the same percentage of water as meat, and even that the use of cereal and water in sausages may have been abused by certain manufacturers in the past, altogether do not alter the fact that a better grade of sausage at a lower price can be made by the inclusion of cereal than without it.

The use of cereal in various forms of sausage has been regarded in all ages as a useful and desirable, if not a necessary, ingredient.

Bread crumbs, cracker crumbs, potato flour and other forms of cereal are regularly used in sausage in various countries of the Old World to improve quality, flavor and appearance as well as to lower cost, as may be amply established by investigation.

New England farmers, for the past 200 years have been accustomed to include in their sausages a large percentage of sage and cracker meal, the purpose of the cracker meal being to give the proper fullness and consistency to sausage in process of cooking, and to give body to the fatty element and make it more palatable and more digestible.

Cereal in sausage serves a multitude of purposes, wholly aside from cheapness, the benefit of which cheapness, by the way, is always passed along to the consumer in the form of a lowered price.

Cereal in sausage form is highly nutritious in itself. In addition to this, it serves both to retain the moisture in sausage, which constantly tends to escape, particularly in the smoked varieties. It gives body to the large proportion of fats in fresh pork sausage and prevents them from melting and escaping in the frying pan.

With the evaporation of moisture which takes place between the packing house and the pan and the dissolution of fats in the frying pan, the product is more than apt to be shrunken, dry or crumbly and more or less unpalatable dish when cooked.

The addition of cereal to fresh pork sausage retains the moisture, some of which would otherwise escape, and it prevents the degeneration of valuable sausage into worthless grease in the pan. To this extent it conserves flavor and juiciness and prevents waste in cooking.

As to the decreased cost of production of sausage with cereal added, the prices of various kinds of sausage are enough lower in each case where cereal is added to support our contention that the consumer enjoys the benefit.

An Advantage You Need This Winter

In favorable weather an Overland Delivery Car can do two or three times the work of a horse and wagon.

But on slippery, snow-covered pavements in zero weather the car shows its really great advantage.

For while a horse's value is impaired by winter weather and winter traffic conditions, the Overland is not affected.

Hundreds of grocers are discarding their old-fashioned horses and wagons for up-to-date motor delivery cars.

Of these, many are using Overlands with much success. These cars are quicker, more dependable, and more economical under all conditions of service.

You will find the Overland a big advantage in your business. Improved service will not only help you hold your present trade, but will extend your delivery limits and make new business possible.

What Percentage Does Your Rent Bear to Your Gross Business?

Harvard Bureau Says in a Grocery Business it Should Be About One and Three-tenths Per Cent. How Often Do You Turn Your Stock? Conclusion of a Most Important and Interesting Article.

[We present herewith a continuation of the matter sent us for publication on "Expenses in Operating Retail Grocery Stores," which has been prepared by the Bureau of Business Research of Harvard College, and the first of which appeared last week. We have published other matter regarding business problems from the same Bureau, all of which has been exceedingly practical and valuable. Every retail grocer in business, whether he has a large or small store, should read this through.—Ed]

(Concluded from last week.)

Rent. Owing to the possibility of utilizing less expensive sites, rent is a smaller expense in the retail grocery business than in the retail shoe trade. Groceries are convenience goods in which there is no style element and which are bought daily in relatively small quantities by almost every family. Consequently, the grocery stores, unless they are dealing in fancy groceries, are located near residential districts in close proximity to their customers, and generally occupy comparatively inexpensive sites. Inasmuch as service to counter customers is rapid, or should be rapid, and since many of the customers give their orders by telephone or to order solicitors, the floor area of a grocery store is not relatively large. Shoes, on the other hand, are more in the nature of a shopping line. Each customer purchases at rather infrequent intervals and wishes to make a selection from a varied stock. Many purchasers of shoes also desire to compare styles and prices in different stores. In order to attract a sufficient volume of trade the shoe store must ordinarily have a prominent location in a shopping district where rents are higher than in residential districts. Moreover, although the average individual sale is larger, the time required for making a sale is greater than in a grocery store, and relatively more stock must be carried. This requires more floor space for a shoe store.

The common figure for rent expense in retail shoe stores is 5 per cent.; in retail grocery stores it is 1.3 per cent., varying from 0.3 per cent. to 4.1 per cent. In grocery stores the tendency is for rent to be less than 1.3 per cent. rather than more, and a significant number of stores have a rent percentage of less than 1 per cent.

The other items of expense are comparatively small, and little can now be added to the statement of the figures given in the table. These figures, as they are classified, emphasize the fact that only comparatively slight economies can be realized in these expenditures. The chief opportunities for economy are in selling and delivering expense.

Total expense ranges in these stores from 10.4 per cent. to 25.2 per cent. The most common figure is 16.5 per cent., but there is also a marked concentration of a smaller group of stores around 13 per cent. The Bureau considers it especially significant that the stores whose expense is 13 per cent. or less can generally give exact and detailed information concerning their businesses. Apparently they have been able to reduce their expense, because of the accuracy of their accounting methods which reveal to them opportunities for economy.

Net profit figures vary widely. In fact, several stores have proved to be operating at a net loss when the proprietor's salary and other items were properly charged as expense. The highest percentage of loss is 3.3 per cent. of the net sales in a store which had inadequate accounting methods. Net profit commonly ranges between 2.5 per cent. and 5.5 per cent. of net sales, with 4.5 per cent. probably as the most typical figure.

Interest. In stores which show a net profit, from which interest can be met, the lowest figure is 0.2 per cent. of the net sales, and the highest 1.7 per cent. The common figure for interest appears to be 0.8 per cent., with probably a tendency to be lower rather than higher. Dividend payments have been omitted in these figures.

Stock-turn, one of the most vital points in retailing, is measured by dividing the cost of merchandise sold during the year by the average inventory of merchandise on hand. Since inventory, which is the divisor, is taken at cost, the cost of merchandise sold, and not the net sales, must be used as the dividend. In the retail grocery trade, as in other businesses, retailers tend to carry more stock than is necessary; their stock-turn is relatively low.

In stores which sell groceries only, the annual stock-turn has been found to range from 3.5 to 23.8. In a majority of stores of this class the annual stock-turn is from 4 to 10, centering around 7, which is therefore the common figure. Enough stores, however, are turning their stock once a month to warrant stating 12 turns per year as a standard to be aimed at.

Grocery stores which sell meats and provisions have a higher average stock-turn than stores which sell groceries only. This is to be expected, since the former have a larger proportion of perishable goods which cannot be carried for so long a time. The lowest annual stock-turn in this class of stores is 7, the highest 26.4, and the common figure 9. A significant group of these stores have an average stock-turn of 14 times per year, and if their provision business is relatively large, the stock-turn is higher.

Average annual sales per sales person is another particularly significant figure. It has a direct relation to sales force expense. Although some figures indicate an even wider variation, it can be stated conservatively that in retail grocery stores the average sales per sales person range from $5,000 to $20,000 per year. In the average grocery store it is about $10,000, apparently tending to be somewhat higher in stores which also carry fresh meat. Although the average unit of sale is smaller in a retail grocery store than in a retail shoe store, the Bureau has found that the average annual sales per sales person are commonly about $10,000 in each. The greater frequency in the sales of staples and standardized goods in retail grocery stores offsets the higher average unit of sale in shoe stores.

The figures from which this summary of expenses and other items was prepared were obtained from 253 stores in both large and small cities, mainly in the East and in the Middle West. In addition to these 253 stores, the Bureau has obtained schedules and incomplete figures from over 250 retail grocers who could not furnish reliable profit and loss statements. The total number of retail grocers who have furnished specific information about their businesses is therefore over 500. The annual sales in the smallest of these stores were $4,000 and in the largest $311,000. A majority of the stores, however, were of medium size, with annual sales varying from $20,000 to $65,000. Despite the wide geographical area represented and despite the wide range in size, the experience of the Bureau indicates that the proprietor of any ordinary grocery store will be warranted in accepting the figures as a reliable guide; he can advantageously compare his own results with them. The lowest expense ratios were not found in the largest stores, nor the highest in the smallest stores. The greatest variations were commonly between stores of approximately the same size operating under similar conditions in a single locality. As a general rule, the common figures for the stores in one city correspond closely to the common figures for similar stores in other cities.

Secretary of the Treasury Asks Congress to Reduce the Tax on Oleo.

Wants Flat Tax of Two or Three Cents Per Pound Imposed Both on Colored and Uncolored. Says Present Tax Doesn't Stop Fraud, But Incites It. Enormous Increase in Demand for Oleo.

Special Correspondence of "Modern Merchant and Grocery World."

Washington, D. C.,

Dec. 16, 1915.

The Secretary of the Treasury has again recommended to Congress that some of the burdens which the law has laid upon oleomargarine in the way of taxes, particularly the tax of 10 cents per pound on colored oleomargarine, be removed, and a uniform tax be imposed on colored and uncolored oleo. The same recommendations have been made to previous Congresses, but the butter interests have always been able to defeat them.

The following is taken from the recommendations of the secretary, which have been laid before Congress:—

It is again recommended that the present oleomargarine law be amended by repealing those provisions imposing a double rate of tax on the product and special taxes on dealers, and substituting therefor a flat rate per pound and single rates of special taxes upon wholesale and retail dealers, with provision for individual or original packages of certain sizes fixed by law, each of which shall bear the tax-paid stamps, marks and brands so as to clearly identify the character of the product to the purchaser.

Under such a law imposing a flat rate of 2 or 3 cents per pound and special taxes of $240 per annum upon wholesale and retail dealers, respectively, without regard to the color of the product, it is estimated, upon the basis of production for the fiscal year ended June 30, 1915, that the total collections would amount to from $4,500,000 to $7,000,000 per annum, with a continued increase in the collections from this source in proportion to the increase in the production of oleomargarine.

It is believed by placing the flat tax of 2 or 3 cents on oleomargarine, colored or uncolored, would reduce fraud in the country and thereby reduce the expenses of the Government in enforcing this law. This is an economic consideration which has great weight with the executive branch of the Government, but it believed by many in the legislative branch that to reduce the tax on colored oleomargarine would bring that product into greater competition with butter.

Four cases of fraud were brought where colored oleomargarine taxable at 10 cents a pound under the law had been withdrawn at one-fourth of 1 cent per pound as uncolored. These four cases reached the enormous tax total of $17,692,410.47, representing the tax on practically all of the oleomargarine produced and placed on the market as uncolored under one-fourth cent stamps by these manufacturers since the inception of the present law. During the past year one additional case was discovered, which, it is hoped, will be decided before another year. It has been estimated that this fifth case represents a fraud totaling $1,503,203.30 in taxes.

The principal officers and employees of the companies involved in these frauds were indicted, and in three cases where trials have been held all were convicted or dead guilty. Prosecutions in a large number of cases for illicit coloration of white oleomargarine and various other violations of this law resulted in conviction or a plea of guilty in every case tried since January 1, 1915. Notwithstanding these results growing out of the thorough and sweeping investigations and vigorous efforts to enforce the law, it only emphasizes the incentive to fraud under the present oleomargarine statutes and the need of amendatory legislation to correct these faults and at the same time afford adequate protection to the revenues and to the public.

The growth of the oleomargarine industry, despite the hampering statutes, is apparent to any one who has examined the statistics of production. In 1903, the records show, there was produced in the United States a total of 5,710,407 pounds of colored oleomargarine and 67,73,689 pounds of the uncolored. In 1907, five years after the passage of the law, there was produced 758,529 pounds of the colored and 3,608,246 pounds of the uncolored oleomargarine. In 1912, just ten years after the passage of the act, there was produced 6,235,639 pounds of the colored and 122,365,414 of the uncolored oleomargarine. During the fiscal year ended June 30, 1915, the records show that there was produced a total of 7,595,141 pounds of the colored and 138,214,907 pounds of the uncolored oleomargarine.

It appears from this that the increase in the production of the colored oleomargarine has been about one-third, whereas the production of the uncolored has increased two-fold since the passage of the law of 1902. Of the 7,500,000 pounds of colored oleomargarine produced during the past fiscal year 3,081,356 pounds were exported, whereas of the 138,000,000 pounds of the uncolored produced only 31,172 pounds were withdrawn for export. The figures prove the growing popularity of oleomargarine.

Late in the week Representative Dyer introduced in the House a bill destined to carry out the recommendations of the Secretary of the Treasury as to a flat tax. The bill also permits the coloring of oleo to look like butter, when "the said process of coloration and ingredients are not in any way injurious to the health of the consumer."

Are You Afraid of Coffee Peddlers?

¶ You have one thing on the coffee peddler which is an invincible weapon of defence against him—if you will use it.

¶ There has never been a coffee peddler whose coffee ran uniform. We know something about how dealers of this class buy coffee and we know that they constantly do the thing which is destructive of a permanent coffee business.

¶ If you will use Harisco Standardized Coffees, your coffee will run uniform and "that 39-cent coffee" will always mean the same to your customer that it means to-day. No customer who has been so served has any reason to buy of a coffee peddler, for he is perfectly satisfied.

WITH THE EDITOR

What an opportunity to improve the status of their product the packers of American sardines have had since the European war began!

As readers of this paper know, almost all fine sardines come from France, Norway and Portugal. Some of the sardines packed in Maine are good enough, though never as good as the foreign. Most of them are unsavory trash, carelessly packed from any old kind of fish in cheap cottonseed oil. The United States Government has been trying for several months to raise the standard of domestic sardines, and perhaps has made some progress, but the quality of the current production is still such that no lover of fine sardines would have a tin of the average American pack on his table under any circumstances.

The opportunity which I mentioned in the beginning is the opportunity to improve the quality of American sardines so as to get some of the demand for fine imported sardines which cannot be filled because there are almost no fine imported sardines. Could that be done? Without doubt. It is probable that not by any stretch of imagination could a sardine be packed in this country as good as the fine French sardine. The fish are not the same, for one thing, and we don't know how to pack them like the French do. But there is no reason at all why we could not pack a sardine, and sell it, as good as some of the Portuguese. We could select the fish, we could pack them better, and use olive oil like the foreign packers use. Such goods would undoubtedly get trade from a class of consumers who now despise the average American sardine, and justifiably.

Are the American sardine packers making any effort to seize this opportunity? Not as far as anybody can see.

In spite of all that the butter interests have been able to do, their restrictive laws, their high taxes and their license acts, the increase in the consumption of oleomargarine has been enormous. No other food product can show such tremendous strides in the last few years. Figures given by the Government and published elsewhere, show that the consumption of oleo in 1903, colored and uncolored, was 73,284,096 pounds. In 1915, the consumption, colored and uncolored, was 145,810,048 pounds, practically one hundred per cent. increase in twelve years! And the most wonderful thing about it is that 138,214,907 pounds of the 1915 consumption was uncolored oleo. The butter interests pretend to be greatly pleased with that. They say they don't care how much oleo sells so long as it isn't colored in imitation of butter. Their statement is hypocritical and untrue. They are against the sale of oleo in any form. They were sure they had killed it when they passed their laws which practically insured its being sold white. They said the sale of oleo was absolutely dependent on its yellow color, and if that were eliminated and the product compelled to come out in its true colors, it would die over night. What an answer to all this is supplied by the Government's figures!

Some business men have less than nothing to show for it after a long commercial life. Sometimes it is due to the bad luck that seems to pursue some men all through their lives in spite of everything they can do. Sometimes it is due to carelessness, shiftlessness, rotten management.

A suburban retail grocer who has been doing business for ten years, and buying goods of Philadelphia jobbers for the whole of that time, asked a certain jobber during the week if he would give him ten days' time on an order amounting to $20. The jobber refused and said he would sell him only for spot cash. There was no feeling about it—the two met in a perfectly friendly way; the grocer after ten years' acquaintanceship, was simply not good for a $20 credit! Which, incidentally, is pretty close to being good for nothing.

Inquiry was made as to what ailed this grocer. Was he crooked? Not at all. Was his business so small that he really wasn't entitled to credit? On the contrary, he did a good business and was considered well-to-do. What, then, was the trouble? "He was simply careless—shiftless—undependable." Had he any financial resources? Yes, he owned property and any reasonable bill could probably be collected. Creditors, however, did not like to have to go to the trouble and expense of using the courts to collect every bill they sold him, so they put him on a strict cash basis.

There is something approaching the pathetic about this: that a man—there are dozens of others—has so little sense as to kill himself commercially, without the slightest necessity for it. There are men in the trade who can't help having this happen to them. They cannot get ahead, try as they will. They are always behind, despite superhuman efforts to keep up. Such men have little or no financial standing purely through misfortune. But here is a fellow who does a good business and owns property, yet who let carelessness put him in a class where jobbers, after ten years' dealings, will not trust him ten days for $20!

Think of a man who after ten years' work can only show for himself, in the minds of the men with whom he has dealt, a reputation for not being worth $20 worth of credit!

Selling Talks With Clerks

BY A MAN WHO HAS BEEN ONE

Conducted by W. E. SWEENEY, Manager for L. Lehman & Co.'s Department Food Store, Dover, N. J.

Do You Know How to Sell a Broom?—Sell it first in your mind.

If you are waiting upon a customer who does "all her own work," and she suddenly says, "What have you got in a good broom?" you don't talk a 60-cent Joy Special, but you pick out a good No. 7 and you stamp it on the floor and say, "There's a working broom for 35 cents, and it's the best broom for the money that we sell."

It has five strands, it's wire tied, it's good, seasoned corn and the handle is straight and smooth.

Now, you have another customer. She, too, needs a broom, her "maid never gets a broom to suit her." Get down your Joy Special—paper covered, perfectly smooth handle, perfectly pretty, unruffled and unsoiled—60 cents!

Yet 60 cents will buy a No. 9—three times heavier and the kind that you should have in the rack when Big Bill wants his,

Coming down to the fine point, selling a broom is little different from selling anything else that represents different grades. And it isn't always the well-dressed woman who selects the varnished handle and who insists on the unruffled corn. The sale is up to you. It's in knowing what to offer and to whom.

One day last summer a well-known woman of means stepped out of her car and entered a grocery to buy five pounds of coffee. The clerk commenced to talk his 25-cent blend, knowing, mind you, the customer to be a discriminating buyer.

Easy Thinking.—One of the biggest mistakes you can make is to put your brain to rest with the thought that the manager is paid to do all the thinking. Why, man alive, no man is paid to do all the thinking, not even Woodrow Wilson.

Every part of your work needs a fresh thought, new displays, shifting displays (which means a utilization of seasonable store space).

Missing customers, competitors' prices, remedying for good your own mistakes, lessons from the mistakes of other customers' remarks, scale testing, points of salesmanship, advertising methods of your own and other cons, listening, causes of fall and dene of prices. Why, in business, a ing fellow who really wishes to get has no earthly show to devote any his time during business hours to thing but business thought; and the fitting rock is the rock of rot.

All this may sound like a long de-ture from black tea, but if you'll on your thinking cap you'll find the nection fast enough.

Important Alum Baking Powder Hearing for January 14th Next.

A hearing to consider the standards baking powder will be held on Jany 14th next in Washington, D. C. e hearing will be on baking powder its ingredients, and will be before joint committee on definitions and ndards of the Bureau of Chemistry.
view of the heated controversies ich have been going on in a number the States on this subject during the last few years, it is anticipated that this hearing will be of considerable interest.

It is anticipated that the hearing will revive the old question of the use of alum and other ingredients in baking powder and whether such ingredients are harmful or are intended to deceive.
At this hearing the trade and all interested parties will be given an opportunity to present to the committee their views as to what should constitute a proper definition or standard for baking powder. The joint committee on definitions and standards is composed of representatives of the United States Department of Agriculture, the Association of American Dairy, Food and Drug Officials and the Association of Official Agricultural Chemists. This committee recommends standards and definitions for food and drug products for the guidance of Federal and State officials in the enforcement of food and drug laws.

How Some Clerks Do Not Sell Goods

Conversations at Three Well-known Retail Stores Between Clerks and Customers, Overheard by Representatives of This Paper.

The following are accurate reports of conversations overheard by representatives of this paper during the week, between clerks in retail stores and customers at the counter.
They are all offered as examples of how not to sell goods:—

What Happened in Finley Acker Co.'s Chestnut Street Store.

Customer.—Have you any imported raspberry jam? Huntley's or Keiler's, or any of them?

Clerk.—No, we have only Acker's.

Customer.—How much is it?

Clerk.—Twenty-five cents.

Customer.—Why it's about as much as the imported, isn't it?

Clerk.—Well, it's made in a clean kitchen, under the most sanitary conditions.

Customer, evidently not convinced by this powerful argument, leaves without buying.

What Happened in Evans' Chestnut Street Drug Store.

Customer.—Please show me some

Clerk (a girl).—Certainly.
(Hands down several.)

Customer.—Are these solid silver?

Clerk.—Why, I can hardly say.
The price of that one in your hand is $3.50.

Customer.—Well, I know you can get a solid silver frame for $4; $3.50 is pretty close to it.

No reply from the clerk, who hands down a frame costing $9.

Customer.—Is this one solid?

Clerk.—Why, I wouldn't think so exactly at that price, would you?

Customer (testily).—But can't you tell me positively?

Clerk goes away and consults another clerk, then returns and says they are all sterling.

Customer buys one at $3.50 and tenders a $5 bill. Clerk rings up the register and hands $2.50 in change.

Customer.—You're giving me a dollar too much.

Clerk.—Oh, yes. Thank you.
(Goes away and fiddles with the cash register and finally comes back.)

Clerk.—Why this change is right.
The frame was $3.50 and you gave me $5—$2.50 is right.

Customer (coldly).—$3.50 from $5 leaves $1.50, not $2.50.

Clerk, still unbelieving, goes away and consults two other clerks. They confirm customer's statement; whereupon she asks one of the other clerks to "fix it up with the cash register," she doesn't know how.

What Happened in William B. Margerum's Meat Market in Reading Terminal Market.

Lady standing in front of counter, waiting some time. While she stands there, another woman comes up. Clerk finishes waiting on his customer and turns to the woman who came to the counter last.

First Lady.—Won't you wait on me?

Clerk.—One minute, lady, I can't wait on two people at once.

First Lady.—But I was here before the other woman. I've been standing here some time.

Clerk.—No; you wasn't.

First Lady.—I was so! I stood here several minutes before she came. (Second lady says nothing.)

Clerk (disagreeably).—Well, have it your own way, lady.

First Lady.—What good will it do to have it my own way, when you give my chance to somebody else?
(She then in high dudgeon leaves stall and buys her meat somewhere else.)

Views of Various Believers in This Doctrine Who Offer Them as Arguments for the Pending Stevens Bill.

[The "Modern Merchant and Grocery World" has obtained and will from time to time present a series of statements by various well-known persons who believe that the manufacturer should have the right to tell the retailer what price he must get for the manufacturer's product. All of the views which will be presented can be taken as arguments for the pending Stevens Bill, which seeks to give a manufacturer that right.—Ed.]

No. 10.—By John A. Lake, Retail Grocer, and First Vice-President of the Michigan State Retail Grocers' and General Merchants' Associations.

NOTE.

Mr. Lake testified before the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce of the House of Representatives in favor of the Stevens bill. His testimony became really an argument between himself and the various members of the committee as to whether the retail prices of food products should ever be fixed by the manufacturer. The argument was so intensely interesting and so closely touches the business of the readers hereof that we have obtained a stenographic report and here present it. It is not only intensely interesting, but gives a vivid glimpse of the feeling of the members of the Congressional Committee on the subject of price regulation.—Ed.

Mr. Sims. It costs 4 cents and retails for 5 cents?

Mr. Lake. Yes, sir. By the way, I am going to furnish you gentlemen with an illustration of cut prices on that very article. Do you know that three bars of 10-cent Ivory soap, sold three for a quarter, weigh exactly the same as five 5-cent bars? The man who buys one bar of Ivory soap for 10 cents is the loser in volume. It is made so as to sell three for a quarter. The weight of three large bars or five small bars is identical. The man who buys the 10-cent bar does not get value received for his money in comparison with two 5-cent bars. Here is a cut made in quantity to meet a certain price.

Mr. Sims. This legislation, of course, will not prevent competitive manufacturers from fixing prices at either wholesale or retail for their own goods as against each other?

Mr. Lake. No, sir; I would not want it to.

Mr. Sims. And as a means of distribution by parting with the title instead of the more expensive method, in many cases, of establishing an agency—I mean establishing a direct agency? For instance, it was brought out here in the hearings with reference to the Ford Motor Car Co., that it is a large manufacturer and sufficiently strong to establish in every city of any size their own sales department and retain the title and sell their machines, keep up the price, and everything of that sort; but another motor car company, not being so large and strong, could distribute better by selling through dealers in the particular locality rather than by establishing a direct agency.

Mr. Lake. My belief along that line is that goods can pass from the manufacturer or producer to the consumer cheaper by parting with the title.

Mr. Sims. Yet fixing the price?

Mr. Lake. On some articles.

Mr. Sims. So as not to put it up or down on selling?

Mr. Lake. So as not to put it up or down, but to give a value for a fixed price on an article. The life of his business depends upon him giving value for the price asked.

Mr. Sims. It has been insisted here that without some provision of law on this that only the larger concerns with the greatest amount of capital can deal through the agent directly and, as was referred to by the chairman, that it would restrict the production rather than increase it by this kind of legislation.

Mr. Lake. I do not feel that it would restrict it. In the first place, the fee charged would be so little that any manufacturer, if he is manufacturing an article that should be offered to the trade at all, can readily part with the small fee if he wants to put it under this law; if he does not want to, give him the right to continue as a free article, allowing the retailer to do as he pleases with it.

The objection I raise to a great many of those standard articles being cut is the fact they are used for bait to get people into stores, and then the store will take an unknown article and pass it off on the man, some other article, possibly, to make up for his loss on this article. Under the present conditions that is his own privilege, but it is competition that is lowering our class of merchants and drawing a poorer class into the retail business.

Now, let me offer as an illustration of this that our Pure Food Commissioner, Mr. Helm, made the statement at a recent convention in Grand Rapids that the only colored oleo license in the State of Michigan was owned in the city of Detroit, and not by reputable retail dealers, but by people who would put in a small store for the winter season during the high price of butter and then he had trouble to keep those men from selling oleo for butter at 4 or 5 cents per pound under the butter price, but at 5, 6 or 8 cents per pound above the oleo price.

Another illustration that he furnished: He had several postal cards in his pocket from outside canners of beans or tomato sauce, where they were advertising within the State of Michigan. Michigan is the great bean State of the Union. These cards asked for cut beans. They wanted them for canning purposes, and on the card they said

The Chance Is Bad

We don't say that something unsatisfactory will happen to every specialty order which doesn't bear one or the other of the above stamps. We do say that the chance of it is very great with an unstamped order, while the chance of it with a stamped order is practically nothing.

The stamp guarantees fair, prompt, satisfactory treatment for the order, and without the stamp there is, of course, no guarantee of that kind.

There are grocers who would no more sign a specialty order without a stamp on it than they would pay for a piece of solid silver without the word sterling on it. It saves a multitude of worries and uncertainties and closes a lot of loopholes.

"You would be surprised at the low quality of the beans that we can use." Now, those canners were not some reputable firm, such as Heinz, Snyder or Van Camp, whose goods the majority of our people who care about our business wish to give our customers, yet they served the stores who did not care what they passed out, and I can not see either honor or good conditions following a business that would permit such an article to be recognized by the market.

Mr. Sims. As a practical result to the consumer, what difference would it make to him whether the goods are sold as you want them sold, with the power to fix the price to the consumer, or that they should be sent there and put in the hands of the agents of the manufacturer and sold, at least to the consumer, at a lower price?

Mr. Lake. I will answer that by saying that I believe the manufacturer with a good article can reach the consumer cheaper, give a better article for the money, and at a fixed price, than he can on the open price.

Mr. Sims. You do not catch what I am trying to get at. The chairman, you will remember, said in substance that you could do that; that you could fix your price without any law by retaining title to the goods. Now, if that can be done, the consumer after all would have to buy from the manufacturer who had fixed his prices. What difference is it to the consumer whether he fixes his prices by the device of retaining title or by parting with the title and yet retaining the right to fix the retail price? What is the practical difference to the consumer?

Mr. Lake. If I get your question correctly, I would say that under the present conditions if the consumer got the article at the same price, it would make no difference. But I am convinced that oftentimes he is paying more, and oftentimes less. They are not uniform.

Mr. Sims. You mean paying more by reason of the manufacturer retaining title to his property until he sells it to the ultimate consumer?

Mr. Lake. Not understood.

Henry Troemner Claims That Ball Scales Are the Handiest.

It is mighty interesting to talk to a firm that was established in 1840. It is more interesting to listen to the experiences of such a firm, particularly is this so when that firm is the recognized leader in their line. Such a firm is Henry Troemner, of Philadelphia, who have been manufacturing scales since 1840.

They are greatly interested in ball scales and have this to say about the ones perfected by them: Ball scales are the handiest of scales, perfect weighers and reliable in every sense; they are simple in construction and free from complication of all kinds. One of its attractive features is that you have no heavy weights to handle. To weigh one pound you place the ball in the first hole; to weigh two pounds you place it in the second hole, and so on until the full capacity is reached. The fractions of the pound are weighed on a side beam in front, each notch on it represents one-quarter ounce.

Our ball scale is a strictly reliable and accurate weighing scale of the first class. The same painstaking care is exercised in their construction as has always been observed in the manufacture of our regular line of counter scales.

This scale has the indorsement of the official Government inspector of scales and weights at the United States Mint at Philadelphia.

It certainly must be pleasant for the present head of this firm to know that all the fine traditions of the firm have been lived up to under his careful management.

The Grocery Markets

Tea.

The principal event of the week in the tea market was a resolution introduced in the United States Senate by Senator Gore, asking that the Secretary of the Treasury inform the Senate as to how much revenue would be yielded by a tax of 10 cents per pound on tea. As a matter of fact, the information is easily forthcoming. We import 95,000,000 pounds of tea a year and a tax of 10 cents would therefore mean somewhat less than $10,000,000. While nobody is speculating very much in tea on account of the prospect of duty, at the same time everybody is keeping the possibility in mind. There has been no change in the situation during the week. The English market for Ceylons and Indias is higher, but this has not yet extended to this country. Interference with shipping is also having an effect. The consumptive demand for tea is good.

Coffee.

The coffee market is heavy and inclined to be weak. There are several hundred thousand more bags of coffee available this year than last year at the same time, and the effect of this is marked. Buyers are staying out of the market and sellers are feeling inclined to shade prices somewhat. No important change has occurred during the week, however. Prices of all grades of Ceylons are about where they were a week ago, good Santos 4s and Rio 7s being, in fact, inclined to be a shade higher. Milds are unchanged for the week, but the outlook is somewhat weaker, as the new season is opening and new crop milds are beginning to come forward. Mocha and Java are unchanged and dull.

Sugar.

The sugar market remains about as it was a week ago. Most refiners are quoting granulated at 6.15 cents, one or two quoting 6.10 cents. The Cuban season is getting under way and quotations on new Cuban raws for early shipment have been made as low as 4.65 cents. This price is somewhat higher as the week closes. From now on the tendency of the market should be downward. Domestic beet granulated is much in evidence and the price ranges in Eastern markets from 5.75 to 5.95 cents. Undoubtedly this grade of granulated is all that has kept the market from going higher. The consumptive demand for sugar is good.

Later.—As the week closes some refiners are cutting granulated to 5.95 cents.

Fish.

The mackerel situation is about as it has been for two or three weeks. No important change has occurred in price. The supply of Norway mackerel is still very light and will continue to be. Cod, hake and haddock in fair demand at about unchanged prices. Salmon shows no change and light request. Imported sardines are still very scarce, especially the French brands, which are virtually out of the market and prices are well maintained. Domestic sardines working up a trifle, but without any particular demand.

Syrup and Molasses.

Glucose is unchanged for the week and quiet. Compound syrup in good seasonable demand at unchanged prices. Sugar syrup steady and dull. Molasses continues to be firm and reports from the South tell of very short supply. The demand is quiet.

Canned Goods.

Tomatoes continue to soar, and it is not easy to-day to buy Maryland 3s in a large way, f. o. b. factory, at less than $1, but some packers will still sell at 97½ cents. The publication of the statistics apparently showing the 1915 pack to be much under the probable consumption is responsible for the present firmness. It seems reasonably certain that prices will go still higher. The demand for tomatoes is good, especially for anything that can be picked up below the top price. Corn and peas are unchanged, corn being relatively firmer than peas. The demand is seasonably fair. Apples are unchanged and quiet. California canned goods show no particular movement from first hands, although retailers and jobbers report some business and prices are unchanged. Small Eastern staple canned goods unchanged and in fair demand.

Dried Fruits.

The market for medium grades of prunes is somewhat weaker on the coast, but small sizes are firm on account of scarcity. In the East the situation is about unchanged. Eastern holders of prunes who bought early are reaping a very large profit. Peaches and apricots are unchanged and dull, both being firm. Raisins, currants and all other dried fruits remain unchanged on last week's basis. Demand seasonably fair.

Beans and Peas.

Pea beans are about where they were a week ago; demand good. Marrows continue firm; demand fair. California limas show a possibility to advance slightly, largely in sympathy with Eastern beans. Green and Scotch peas unchanged and quiet.

Butter.

The butter market is active, with a good consumptive demand at unchanged prices. Receipts of butter are very light and the withdrawals from storage very heavy. The market is healthy throughout on the present basis, and probably will remain about as it is now for some little time.

Eggs.

The egg market is firm at an advance of 1 cent per dozen. An active consumptive demand is absorbing the receipts of fresh eggs on arrival, and storage eggs have been called upon at an advance of 1 cent per dozen. Everything good in eggs is in good demand, and the situation is very strong and healthy.

Cheese.

The cheese market is firm, with a normal consumptive demand for the season and a fair export demand. Stocks are reducing rapidly and the situation is steady to firm.

Provisions.

All cuts of smoked meats are firm at unchanged prices and with good consumptive demand for the season. Pure lard is firm and unchanged, while compound is also firm at an advance of ½ to ¾ cent. This is due to the high cost of cotton-seed oil. Dried beef, canned meats and barreled pork are all unchanged and in fair demand.

Poultry.

The outlook is for a good supply of high-grade turkeys and this will certainly be so if the weather continues cold and dry, as it has been this week. This allows free shipments and makes everybody feel better. The outlook for the price of prime turkeys is 25 to 26 cents per pound, which is below the Thanksgiving range. Chickens and fowls bid fair to rule from 19 to 20 cents; ducks, around 20 cents, and geese at 16 to 18 cents. The situation is healthy throughout.

AMONG THE TRADE.

Following is a list of the newly elected officers of the Philadelphia Association of Manufacturers' Representatives: President, Mr. Robert Stewart, Corby, Cobb & Co.; vice-president, Mr. W. W. Terry, Charles E. Hires & Co.; second vice-president, Mr. Walter C. Thomas, Franklin Sugar Refining Co.; secretary, Mr. Harry A. Moore, merchandise broker; treasurer, Mr. M. L. When the next customer comes in for a nationally advertised brand of something, try just for experiment to sell her an unknown brand, and have somebody time you. Trade Interested in Plan to Tax Tea and Put an Extra Tax on Sugar. New Ordinance Puts Patent Medicines Under Ban. Market Summary.

Special Correspondence of "Modern Merchant and Grocery World."

New York, Dec. 17, 1915.

The resolution which was introduced in the Senate at Washington during the week by Senator Gore, asking the Treasury Department to furnish information as to how much revenue would be produced by a tariff of 10 cents per pound on tea and a tariff of 1½ cents per pound on sugar, has aroused great interest here. Many of the local trade have been expecting that now there is a deficit in the Governmental revenues, the eyes of Congress would turn to tea as an easily available source for raising a large sum of money. The imports of tea are between 90,000,000 and 100,000,000 pounds per year, from which it could easily be calculated that the proposed tax would produce around $10,000,000 of revenue. This of itself is not a large sum, but would be useful in connection with smaller sums raised on other products. The proposed increase in the sugar tariff is also very interesting. The present tariff on raw sugar is 1 cent per pound, and the proposed increase of 1½ cents would therefore mean an increase in the revenue of 50 per cent, which would run into a very large sum of money, probably, if my recollection serves me, at least $30,000,000.

Most of the trade here who are in a position to know appear to believe that one or the other, perhaps both, of these plans will be adopted.

The proposal to tax automobiles and gasoline has proven very unpopular among a section of the population which has come to be very large indeed. Automobileists feel that they are already bearing more than their share of the expense of the Government. The proposed tax on sugar would not meet with any particular opposition, nor would, perhaps, the tax on tea, and it is generally thought that the Government will choose some such plan rather than in the Presidential year fly in the face of public opinion.

News reached the city during the week that the Consolidated Meat and Grocery Co., a chain of seven retail stores of New Bedford, Mass., had gone into bankruptcy with the consent of the directors. It was able to pay nearly 100 cents on the dollar, but did not see any particular future for itself.

The liabilities were about $25,000 and so were the assets.

On January 1st next, a new ordinance will go into effect here which will revolutionize the conditions surrounding the sale of patent medicines. After that day what is known as the "Goldwater Formula" ordinance will go into effect. It requires patent medicine manufacturers to do one or two things; first, to print on the labels the names and proportions of the ingredients contained in their medicine. This will give the health authorities a standard by which to measure claims of efficacy which manufacturers may make for their medicines. Second, the manufacturer, if he does not wish to print his formula upon his package, may file it with the Department of Health. Thus it will not get to the public, but will still be where the Department can use it in case there is fraud. It is expected that most manufacturers will adopt the latter course.

Retail and wholesale dealers will be requested by the Department to handle no patent medicine after January 1st which does not comply with the ordinance.

It is said that the patent medicine manufacturers will fight the ordinance on the ground that it compels an unreasonable disclosure of a private formula.

SUMMARIZED MARKET CONDITIONS.

Tea quiet, but steady.—Coffee irregular, with market somewhat heavy. Values fairly steady for the week. Rio 7s scarce.—Sugar very uncertain, with raws declined on account of coming Cuban season. Refined unchanged.—Canned tomatoes very strong and about 5 cents per dozen higher for the week. Short supply is the reason. Other canned goods unchanged and in moderate demand.—Imported sardines still scarce and firm. Norwegian brand slightly easier. Domestic sardines steady to firm. Salmon unchanged and quiet.—Apricots firm and advanced, mainly on account of foreign demand. Domestic demand very light. Prune easier on the coast, particularly for medium sizes. Eastern markets unchanged. Other dried fruits all firm and seasonably active.—Wheat irregular, but close the week slightly higher.—Flour about unchanged for the week. Scarce in the market and in good demand.

How Does This Appeal to You?

What D'ye Know About This.

Did you see that stuff in last week from the Harvard people about how much it costs to do business? I mean specially that about how much some stores were making gross? Some of 'em weren't making 15 per cent.! When it costs 'em around 17 to do business! What d'ye know about that?

The Harvard people found that one man was losing over 3 per cent. because he wasn't doing his book-keeping right. It's a cinch he thought he was making money.

By gravy, there's one thing I ain't ever been able to get into my skull, and that's why there's any excuse at all for a man not knowing whether he's making money. He knows what his goods cost him and he knows what it costs him for rent and clerks' wages—everything. Why in thunder there's any room for doubt about it I can't see and I ain't ever been able to see.

But take it from me, there's a whole lot of 'em that don't know. A blamed lot more than you'd think. How do they get away with it? There's only one kind that get away with it and that's the kind that really are making money. The kind that ain't making any but think they are, never get away with it. You say they'd go to pieces whether they knew they were making it or not. Not by a jugfull, because if they really knew they were losing instead of making, they might be able to pull up. Don't you see that?

I talked with a customer last week who has been in business for just about one year. That fellow—fine chap—is the carelessst Indian in the world. His ideas are all right and he always means to do things right, but he never does.

I was talking with him about his first year in business.

"I've made out all right," he said.

"That's great," I said. "I'm tickled to pieces to hear it. I knew you'd done a good business, but I didn't know how much money you'd made."

"Of course I haven't made a lot of money," he said, "but I've made my living out of it and paid my expenses. That's good enough for the first year, ain't it?"

"It sure is," I said, "there's a lot that don't do that."

I wasn't going to ask him any questions about his private business, but I didn't have to. He came right out with it.

"I did a business of about $20,000," he said. "I haven't any bad money on my books—not a dollar. In fact I'm pretty well collected up. I've paid all my bills except a few small current things that don't amount to anything. I've had my living, which I suppose amounts to $20 a week—I've lived close and there's only the wife and me. That means I've made about a thousand dollars, don't it?"

Do you get that? Think of it, for a minute, will you?

"Well, of course there's something else to it beside that, old man," I said. "What about your stock? How much did you have to begin with?"

"My opening stock was about $2,000."

"Well, that was a pretty big stock," I said. "How much have you got now?"

"I don't know that. I haven't had time to take any inventory. I've expected to get around to it, but I've been so tied up with other things that I haven't seemed to get at it. I think it's pretty well up, though."

"But don't you see that you can't tell whether you've made anything till you know how much stock you've got?" I said. "Suppose you took an inventory and found you only had $1,000—you'd have lost a thousand, wouldn't you? Suppose you found you only had $1,500, you'd have lost $500, wouldn't you?"

"Oh, I think the stock's pretty well up," he said.

"But thunder, man, you don't know until you take inventory!" I said. "Have you got as much stock as you had when you started?"

"No, I don't think I've got quite as much as that," he said.

Why he don't know how he's done in his first year. He may have got his living out of his stock and not out of the business at all. Ain't that right? And if that's so, and if his second year's like his first, he'll be plumb busted at the end of it, although he thought he was doing fine.

Good Lord, I know a better way of living than that. Just go buy a $2,000 stock and live on it till it's gone. No need to work at all.

"Another thing," I said. "Did you charge in any salary for yourself in your expenses?"

"What are you talking about?" he said. "It's my business, isn't it—am I working for anybody?"

"Sure you are—you're working for this business, and if it ain't carrying a salary for you it ain't supporting itself. If your inventory showed you had $2,000 on hand yet, and you hadn't charged up your own wages, the business didn't make a dollar—it just broke even.

"How much did you have in bank when you started?" I said.

"After I paid for my stock I had about $500."

"How much you got now?"

"I got about $400."

"And how much do you owe?"

"About $300."

"Then there's $400 gone there. My advice to you, old man, is to go over your stock right away and know where you are. You may be in great shape and you may be in mighty bum shape."

"I'll get around to it as soon as I can," he said. I didn't worry him any.

He'll be all right, if he's really making money and as long as he don't guess he's making more money than he is. If he's in wrong in either of those ways, then it's good night in a mighty little while.

Getting an Association Before the Trade and the Public.

Secretary J. M. Brady, of the Williamsport (Pa.) Retail Grocers' Association, has a unique way of calling the attention of the trade and public attention to the activities of his organization. In a recent issue of his local paper, the Williamsport "Sun," he had the following letter:—

Editor of "The Sun":—

Hoping you will allow me a space in your valuable paper I will thank you in advance. As secretary of the Retail Grocers' Association I wish to place a few facts before the retail grocers of the city. In the first place we will have an open meeting in the committee rooms of the Y. M. C. A. this evening at 8 o'clock and hope to see all the retail grocers of the city present, as there will be nomination of officers for the ensuing year. We also intend to try to arrange a regular programme for advertising in the daily papers.

We also want the grocers to know that they are in danger of being surrounded by the chain store system and that if something is not done in a short time you will be in the same boat which the Pottsville and Harrisburg grocers found themselves when they woke up after the chain stores hit them. Now, with the assistance of the jobbers, they are putting up a great fight, but it is costing them a great deal more than if they had been prepared. The Employees' Compensation Act will also be discussed this evening.

Now, Mr. Retail Grocer, you think the present organization has not been of any benefit to you, but let me tell you that if it were not for the few grocers who have hung together in the past you would be awake, and wide awake, at present, trying to hold your business together. So sacrifice a little of your time, attend this meeting, put your shoulder to the wheel and push for yourself and for your fellow grocer and see if it will not benefit the whole community.

Respectfully,

J. M. BRADY,

Secretary Williamsport Retail Grocers' Association.

No. 342.—Unsuccessful Ways of Evading a Restrictive Agreement.

Brooklyn, N. Y.

I was greatly interested in a recent article by you on tying one's self up, when he sells his business, not to go in that business again for the time mentioned in the agreement. That agreement is of great importance to the man who buys a business; as a matter of fact, it may ruin him if he has not thought to give himself that protection. This is especially true of a stranger who goes into the neighborhood knowing no one. The man from whom he buys the business knows every one, and if he can take another store nearby, the chance is he can pretty soon get all the trade which he sold to the other man.

I am deeply interested in this subject, for I bought the above business last February. In the agreement the man of whom I bought agreed not to go into the business again within fifteen squares of me in all directions, for two years. He was well known in the neighborhood and a very popular fellow, while I was almost a stranger.

A new store has started up about three squares from me, which I believe he is in some way interested in. It is not run in his name, but in the name of a company. I believe it to be a corporation. He has been seen going in there nearly every day, and I believe he has something to do with the management. The advertising of the new store is done in a peculiar, characteristic way which he used to use, but which I did not carry on when I bought the business, because I was not able to do so. What I should like to know is, whether if he has anything to do with this business I can interfere with him. I have been told that he is already sending solicitors through the neighborhood, and I am confident that he will make inroads into my trade if he cannot be interfered with.

D. K. R.

If this correspondent is right in his suspicion, what a contemptible thing it is, outside of any question of law, to take a man's money under the positive agreement not to go in business in competition with him, and then sneak in behind other men's backs! I have seen many such cases, and I never found even one man who had the shadow of a decent argument to justify himself.

Now as to the case cited. It is fundamental in law that what a man may not do personally, he may not do through an agent, employee or representative. What he cannot do directly, he cannot do indirectly. The books are full of cases where men have sold their businesses under agreements not to re-engage in business for a certain time, and later tried to get in through some underhand route. Although as I explained in the previous article, the courts don't like these restrictive agreements—they consider them in restraint of trade—but where they find a man who has made one and then meanly tried to escape it, they usually smash him and smash him just as hard as they can. In decision after decision it has been held that a man who has tied himself up by such an agreement cannot evade it in somebody else's name or by any subterfuge whatever.

For example, in one well known case, the owner of a business sold it under a restrictive agreement. Within a short time after that a man who had been a sort of servant of his opened the same kind of a store within the limited territory. The buyer of his business got after him, and proved that he was supplying the money and the brains, while the servant was supplying only the name. The court made short work of that enterprise.

In another case a man who sold out under a restrictive agreement put his son in the same business within the time and the territory named in the agreement. It was shown that it was really the father who was operating the business and an injunction was granted to stop him.

It is not even safe, when one has positively agreed not to go into a certain business, to take stock in a corporation that is doing that kind of a business. And there are many cases that say a man may not, under such circumstances, help to organize or manage such a corporation, whether he has stock in it or not.

In one case a man, after selling his business under a restrictive agreement, loaned money to another man who was doing business within the restricted territory. His buyer took him into court, on the ground that loaning money to a rival business was becoming interested in it. The court said no. It appeared that the lender of the money had merely advanced money on a mortgage, and was not actually interested in the business, so that the loan was not disturbed. It is interesting to wonder, however, what would have happened if the debt had not been paid and the lender had had to take the business over. It seems clear that if the courts were consistent they would not let him run it.

I recall another interesting case in which the owner of the business was a woman. She sold out under a restrictive agreement, but some time afterward married a man who was in the same business in the same territory. An attempt was made to stop her from doing anything in connection with her husband's business, but it failed. Even though she admitted that she helped her husband conduct his business, the court refused to enjoin her, on the ground that her new husband's business was already established and in helping him, she was not his suspicions are correct. His agreement is reasonable, and would be enforced.

Grocers' and General Merchants' Insurance Premiums Under Workmen's Compensation Act

All Companies Have Made Rates for New Act, Which Becomes Operative January 1st Next. Rate Depends on Risks of Accident in the Particular Business and Premium Depends on Size of Pay Roll.

Readers of this paper have been adequately prepared for the enforcement of the new Pennsylvania Workmen's Compensation Act, which goes into effect on January 1st next. For several weeks we have published "Possible Cases" under the new act, showing how the small employer like the retail grocer and general storekeeper will be affected by it. For every employer in Pennsylvania, outside of housekeepers and farmers, will be subject to the law after January 1st. If he accepts its provisions, he will have to pay employees wages after they are injured because of accidents happening in connection with the business, even though he is not to blame for the accidents, and even though the accidents do not even happen on his premises. If he rejects the act, as he can do, he must take his chances, if an accident happens, of being sued for damages by the injured employee, with three of his strongest defenses denied him by the act.

A complete digest of the act was published several weeks ago. It explained how the small employer must take out insurance somewhere, in order to make injured employees sure of getting their damages. He can insure with regular liability insurance companies, which most of them are doing, or with the State, which seems to be considered rather uncertain, as it is not clear whether the State is going to have sufficient money to handle the insurance losses. All the stock companies have adopted rates for employers' insurance under the Workmen's Compensation Act, and are quoting the same figures. The table of rates is very elaborate and complicated, with different rates for different lines, depending on the different grades of risk which the different lines involve for employees. The basis of all rates is the yearly payroll. If a retailer has a payroll of $100 a week, which is $5,200 per year, his rate will be so many cents per $100 of his payroll.

For instance, the rate which general stores will pay is 56 cents. Take a store with $100 a week payroll or $5,200 per year; it will pay 56 cents for each $100 of that $5,200, or $29.12. This buys him one year's insurance against all accidents which can happen to his employees.

The grocery store which handles no meats and provisions will pay 28 cents, which figured out in the same way, would be $14.56 per year. If the grocery store sells meats and provisions, its rate will be 56 cents.

The above are among the highest rates charged for any retail business. Cigar stores and clothing stores pay only 12 cents. The other stores pay more because of the greater chance of accidents, as in cutting meats.

The small store with one clerk will pay a minimum of $10 per year. This is where a particularly small payroll would bring the premium below $10.

Pennsylvania Organization Notes.

Mr. Smedley visited leading merchants of Lewisburg on December 7th in an effort to interest them in organization. Found a live lot of business men and in January an effort will be made to revive the old association or establish a new one.

The Sunbury Association is still adding to its roll of members. At a meeting held on December 7th, it was voted to rent rooms for permanent office and meeting room. A request has been made to the Public Service Commission to secure better lighting service and the Pennsylvania Railroad is being petitioned to remove an obstructing bridge over the main street and to build a subway.

The Johnstown Association offers a prize of $10 for the best name for its coming food and industrial exposition.

The Indiana Association held a reception for members and their clerks on December 7th. It was a big event, practically every clerk in the city was present. There were some stirring talks, good refreshments and a splendid social time. This is a first step towards securing the hearty co-operation of the employees with employer.

Mr. Smedley visited the Danville Association on December 7th. Rival attractions proved too much for the merchants and the attendance was small. We enjoyed meeting those present and some seed was sown for future work.

Danville is a prosperous town and the organization has a great opportunity to be of service to the community.

Mr. Smedley visited the newly organized Milton Association on December 6th. The meeting was held in the Y. M. C. A. Hall and was well attended. This association is making progress—it is about to establish a credit rating system and will inaugurate several other important matters in the near future. A banquet is contemplated. Just now a membership campaign is in full swing. Milton is booming—lots of work and a busy lot of merchants.

REPRESENTATIVE IN EVERY TOWN

The Retail Grocers' Circle of Scranton held a rousing big meeting in the Board of Trade rooms on December 9th. There was a large attendance. Senator Walter McNichols presided and Secretary James read a report showing the achievements of the organization for the past year. Organizer Smedley was then introduced and he talked to the members on the Workmen's Compensation Act and Business Building. He was followed by R. H. Keffer, who answered many questions propounded by the members relative to the Compensation Act. Lunch was then served, after which the meeting reconvened and addresses made by several of those present. It was voted to hold another open meeting early in January. It was one of the best grocers' meetings ever held in Scranton.

Chester merchants were addressed by several insurance men on the new Workmen's Compensation Act on December 9th.

The Honesdale Board of Trade has secured an important industry that will mean the employment of many men.

The Wellsville Association opened its new Community House on December 4th. It is thoroughly equipped for its purposes and consists of a parlor, well furnished, has an Edison diamond disc talking machine, the latest magazines, good rugs, etc. The adjoining room is fitted up with couches and there is a crib for infants, rocking chairs, etc. Another room is fitted up as a dining room, where visitors may eat their luncheon. Another room is a well equipped kitchen. A bath room and lavatory has been provided. The rooms are all steam heated and well lighted.

A competent woman is in charge. On the opening day 150 women from rural districts used the building and were loud in their praise of the service and convenience rendered.

The Retail Merchants of Scranton held a rousing good meeting on Monday, December 13th. The annual election was held. President Conrad, with his able assistants, is doing good work.

The Pittsburgh Butchers' Association held an open meeting on November 21st at their rooms in the New Century Building. It was agreed to employ a business agent to solicit new members and to do missionary work among the trade. Mr. M. Hoechstetter was appointed to the new position. The association will hold a banquet at the Hotel Anderson on December 28th. After the business had been disposed of several new members were elected and refreshments were served. Songs, recitations and a wrestling match added to the evening's enjoyment.

which they carried recently in their local paper. Apparently it filled two columns of the paper—I don't know whether it was placed next to reading matter or not. I am reproducing the advertisement very much reduced in size.

I hate to think that the readers of this department are getting the idea that "that fellow is always knocking," and yet it seems as if I had to knock a good deal if I express what I really believe to be the truth. Now take this advertisement of the Cupp Co. I may be entirely wrong about it—they may have found this system very profitable to them—but as I see it, a great deal of it is wasted. Take the items under "Good Things to Eat." Apparently no effort has been made to cut prices very much, so what is there appealing about "California Table Peaches, 2 cans for 25 cents"? I would be willing to lay a modest wager that the Cupp Co. cannot point to one order for California peaches that they got from this advertisement, or for that matter, for the other items in that list which are offered in the same way. It takes more than that to induce people to buy goods to-day. Take "Country Sausage, pound 18 cents." I know that they would get more business if they would advertise sausage in something like this fashion:—

If You Like Good Sausage, Read This.

Lots of "country" sausage offered to-day never saw the country—it is factory made entirely, and nothing at all like real country sausage. We have some sausage here now that will take you back to the old days on the farm, if you ever lived on one. Tender, clean, young pork, combined with savory herbs and spices. Delicious! A splendid beginning for a cold day.

18 Cents a Pound.

I'll leave it to anybody whether something like this—I don't mean my wording at all, but something like it—wouldn't be certain to sell more sausage than "Country Sausage, pound 18 cents." If that is so with sausage, it is so with everything. Of course you can't advertise as many articles, but that is a benefit rather than a detriment. I believe too many things are advertised here—half or three-quarters as many would have been better in the same space.

I should have started this advertisement with "The little daily savings," etc. Everything that appears above that I would have put at the bottom. It prevents the heading from getting proper attention. If the Cupp Co. will take a copy of this advertisement and fold it over so that their name and the addresses of their three stores will not show, they will agree with me that the whole advertisement looks better and more ship shape.

NOTE.—This department is devoted to the criticism of advertising matter sent in, to the devising of new advertising ideas for special occasions, upon request and to the suggesting of original advertisements when data is supplied. All communications sent for this Department should be addressed to the Editor of Science of Advertising. They will be taken up in strict rotation.

The High Cost of Package Meats.

Philadelphia Contributor Says He Has Been Able to Increase His Sliced Meat Business By Showing Customers What Very High Prices They Pay for Canned Meats.

Any reader of your paper wishing to sell sliced meats rather than canned, will find as I did that he has a powerful argument in the greater cheapness of the former. The average consumer has no conception of what he is paying for the package.

When a customer buys preserved sliced meats she pays dearly for the fancy jar or can. Take, for instance, dried beef in jars weighing about 21 ounces, retails at from 30 to 35 cents. You may be surprised that there's only about 9 ounces of beef in the jar, so the consumer is paying at the rate of from 53 to 60 cents per pound for her dried beef.

She pays 30 to 35 cents for bacon in jars—gross weight about 21 1/2 ounces. The jar weighs 12 1/2 ounces—in reality she gets 9 ounces net weight of bacon. At this price she is paying at the rate of 53 to 62 cents per pound for bacon and, further, not always cut to the thickness she prefers—isn't that extravagance—a nonsensical way of buying? I have persuaded many of my customers that it is and am doing a growing business in the sliced meats.

How to Make Other Cocoas as Good as Ours

Take the average cocoa on the market and carry it through another process or two, and you may have an article about as good as Croft's Swiss Milk Cocoa.

The trouble is that other manufacturers will not use that "other process or two," because of its cost. They prefer to send out their product half made, as it were—containing indigestible and ill-tasting ingredients which should have been eliminated—so they can save a little on the cost of making.

Croft's Swiss Milk Cocoa has everything taken out that should be taken out, and for that reason, among others, it has the smoothest, finest flavor of any cocoa made.

Will you mention the "Modern Merchant and Grocery World" when you write?

You Merchants Who Have to Meet Economy Stores, Read This

A Pennsylvania Contributor Emphasizes What You Have But Most Economy Stores Have Not, Personality, and Tells How to Capitalize It. It is One of the Three Main Business Factors, the Other Two of Which Are the Right Goods and the Right Price.

As I see it, there are just three big things in business: The pulling power of man's own personality, the goods, and the price. It is always found beyond any dispute where a business has succeeded there is a brain at the head of it bigger than the business.

Personality is essential to every organization. It requires more than mere money's worth to satisfy a customer. Business cannot be completely organized like a machine. The day will never come when folks will be satisfied simply with honest value. Human nature demands a smile and a "thank you" as extra measure. Sentiment plays a tremendous part in determining profits and losses. Good will is a more valuable asset than good plants and good plans. It is the first duty of the owner or proprietor of a business to establish himself in the good graces of his customers. Therefore, this good will is practically as much a part of the capital invested in the business as the plant and goods in a manufactory or shop. Whenever a consolidation of industries occurs, whenever a long established concern passes into new hands, sums of money, often exceeding the amount laid down for realty and equipment, are demanded for the close bond of friendship which has gradually grown between the merchant and the trade.

We all form our prejudices and we esteem them fondly. Every man has a profound dislike for some shop, some corporation, some hotel or railroad because of an unpleasant experience with a proprietor, an official or an employee. Fortunes cannot be built out of shrewdness alone. Brilliant intellects are discounted by a surly disposition or a strain of petty meanness. Little things destroy big opportunities. Individuals can only advance a limited distance toward prosperity. All games that can be played by a lone hand are a sheer gamble.

The employment and the disciplining of help is one of the most important things in any business. It has often been questioned whether many storekeepers were not maintaining their business for the benefit of their help rather than for their own financial benefit. Whenever employees fail to regard the common rules of breeding and civility, it is because no rules for the treatment of buyers have been established and maintained. Few of us pause to differentiate between an underling or his chief when insulted or rebuffed. It is not the directly guilty upon whom resentment focuses, but you, the supreme head, are blamed. And rightly so. Men and women will put up with personal inconveniences rather than patronize institutions which have courted their hostility. The public can neither be damned or dammed. You can't build a permanent dyke around any set of patrons. Even thrones are overturned by organized dislike. If you are a proprietor or a helper, if you serve in any capacity, it is part of your job to exhibit gratitude for favors. You are being paid a profit for your wares, your facilities, your faculties and your time, and even if you do occasionally encounter an unreasonable human, it is no less than common sense to meet rudeness with self-control. Even if you come out best in an argument with a "kicker" you are bound to emerge from the row with the worst of it. Thereafter you cannot reach the vindictive individual, but your greater prominence and exposed position afford him opportunities to divert custom and inflict harm in untold ways. If you lose a customer to a neighboring grocer or butcher, he has something that you have not. It may be the personality, the price, or the goods, but it is one of the three.

I assisted in taking an inventory where a partner was selling his interest in the business and found that the store had no wash basin, but the proprietors, who were supposed to have ordinary training in sanitary measures, used the scrub bucket for a wash basin. You can easily imagine what condition of hands this would leave to serve customers after having been washed in scrub water. You and your clerks must be cleanly dressed and otherwise of wholesome appearance. The hands that handle potatoes or kerosene must not, without previous thorough washing, dive into prunes or other food. As to the handling of prunes and other like merchandise, for a few pennies you can provide a fork that will make it unnecessary your touching them with your hands. Pickles, olives and salt fish, too, might be handled in like manner by fork or spoon. Establish a reputation for a thorough observation of the principles of cleanliness and you will have made a big stride toward the building of good will.

Your assembling of merchandise in your establishment, your display of same is part of the service you render your customers. Therefore, your store must be kept in a cleanly, sanitary and orderly manner.

Arguments by clerks with customers must be entirely eliminated if contention is kept down. Good will and the reputation of the merchant or a business are inseparable. The former absolutely depends upon the latter. The merchant enjoying the reputation that he will adjust a complaint just as cheerfully as he will sell his wares has made a long stride toward the building of good will. It is more profitable to take back an article and cheerfully refund the purchase price even if the customer is not altogether reasonable about it than to refuse to do so and thereby drive the customer elsewhere. There is just one way to settle a dispute, if the merchant is going to succeed, and that is to the entire satisfaction of the customer.

"The Goods." From the time the merchant turns the key in his store on Monday morning until he closes it on Saturday night, if he succeeds, he will have to keep in mind the fact that he must have a reasonable profit on every article that goes out the door. The good merchant is always familiar with the goods he handles. The mere knowledge of cost and selling price is by no means sufficient, yet I know of merchants where even this is lacking. The retail merchant striving for success should know where and how the goods were made or grown. He should know their particularly good qualities and if at all possible know how they compare with merchandise of like nature. He should be able to tell his customers all there is to know about his wares. If food, a word from the merchant as to the purity, wholesomeness or exceptional high quality of the article influences the customer more than any label no matter how artistically painted. You dare not misrepresent. Truth is the only thing that carries conviction. You must believe it yourself and know it to be true before you can convince your customer. Don't misrepresent. Don't claim anything for your wares not in strict accordance with the facts. If not sure, better say nothing, but a good merchant must always be sure. He must know, else he is doomed to failure. You must possess the merit and confidence of your customers in your capability, reliability and honesty.

Many merchants overlook the importance of buying judiciously. The most important point in buying is the paying. Anyone can buy a store full of goods, but not anyone can pay for the same. Salesmen who desire to place a dozen of this or a dozen of that in your store of some unadvertised or unstaple goods should be avoided unless sold on consignment; by that I mean, placed on your shelf and paid for when you sell the goods. Great manufacturing establishments are realizing the fact and taking it upon themselves to establish among the consumers a demand for their articles as a part of their business. I hold that it is not the duty of the retailer to establish that demand.

It requires care and tact to successfully handle salesmen. Every salesman coming in your store should have a courteous hearing, and the proprietor always knowing what he wants will be able to tell the salesman that he cannot use his article and that there is no use of taking the merchant's time or the salesman's; both are valuable and can always be used elsewhere.

Where four or five salesmen are waiting to see a merchant, and as he looks them over and recognizes each one, for they may be regular men calling upon him, it is his duty to go to each man whom he does not have an order for and explain that fact to them so that they may not waste their time. I hold that the merchant with tact can dismiss salesmen without an order and still retain their good will if he will recognize the fact that they are calling upon him in a regular routine and that they are doing the business of their house and that is a part of their duty, and he has no right to be grouchy with them. The good will of the salesman is an asset to the merchant that he cannot overlook, and he does not know when he may be called upon to ask favors of them or their house. When goods received are not as ordered, it is always better to wait until the salesman's next trip and let his side of the case before returning the goods.

"The Price." You never know when customers are weighing you, and consequently the only safe way is the honest way. I saw a clerk handling a Polish woman who didn't seem to have much intelligence, but who had been a customer of the store for eighteen years, and his clerk sold this woman two pounds of 30 cent coffee and two pounds of 25 cent coffee. The coffee was in separate bins but was the same grade of coffee, costing the merchant 15 cents a pound. This was the last order from the Polish woman. She was testing out the honesty of the store on the coffee and found them guilty. It is not possible to trace the effects of short weight, inferior goods or dishonesty of any kind.

Everybody has to sell something to exist; time, labor, ideas, money, goods or chattels. When you put a price on your word, or divulge confidential matters, or quit a job half done, you are a marked and marked down proposition. If you are selling butter at one cent higher than any other merchant in the community, that high rate is commented upon unfavorably to you. If your butter is one cent lower than all your other neighbors, it is commented upon favorably to you. Competition is dragged into existence by the protesting voice of a dissatisfied community or neighborhood. Business men must demonstrate to the customer that he has what they need in the best quality at the lowest possible price. We have seen the price prevail against quality and the pulling power of the merchant's personality and win out. In a small city in this State we have had such a demonstration during the last six or eight months where the cut-rate stores did an enormous business in very dull times by their low prices, inferior goods and absence of the owner's personality in the store. Labeling the prices has marked effect upon buyers. The very best articles should be labeled. Do not force the customer to stop and inquire the price before he can settle in his mind whether he can afford to buy or not. Confidence in the price and its advantages involves a mental operation before deciding to buy and that operation is facilitated when goods are displayed in clear light and marked by a price card.

Stevens Bill Reintroduced in Congress.

Congressman Stevens, Its Father, Having Retired, it Will be Sponsored by Representative Ayres, of Kansas. Bill Would Give Manufacturers of Trademarked Goods Right to Fix Retail Prices. One Hundred and Sixty-five Representatives Said to Have Declared for It.

Special Correspondence of "Modern Merchant and Grocery World."

Washington, D. C.,

December 22, 1915.

In the House of Representatives, Congressman William A. Ayres, of Kansas, during the week introduced the Stevens standard price bill without change or amendment. Former Representative Raymond B. Stevens, of New Hampshire, who introduced the measure in the last Congress is now one of counsel to the Federal Trade Commission, but the country-wide discussion of this legislation has so thoroughly identified it with the name of "Stevens" that it will probably continue to be so designated.

At the opening of Congress more than 165 members of the House and approximately a like proportion of the Senate had pledged their support to the bill which Representative Ayres has reintroduced. The bill will give to the manufacturer the right to fix the retail price at which his trade-marked goods are sold.

WITH THE EDITOR

The year 1916 is opening with infinitely brighter conditions and prospects than the year 1915. Then the European war was only five months' old, business was exceedingly depressed, the European demand for American merchandise had not set in, and we were all in the dumps, nobody knowing precisely where he was.

Consider the difference to-day. An enormous demand has sprung up for almost all staple American merchandise, our exports show unprecedented totals and the balance of foreign trade is enormously in our favor. Our mills are busy to capacity, new industries created by the war are springing up to find their output eagerly sought at top prices, labor is employed and in many lines is at a premium. Millions are being distributed every little while, it seems, as dividends.

The grocery business is in excellent condition. Jobbers are selling goods and making money. Their collections are good. If a jobber hasn't business to-day he will never have it. If he isn't making money to-day he will never make it. Some jobbers who have been pessimists about business for years, even when there was no particular reason for it, are to-day willing to admit that they have no reason for complaint.

The retail grocer is always the last to feel prosperity. He is the last in this case, and some retailers are as yet feeling no prosperity at all. In some cases this is because the tidal wave has not yet reached them, and in other cases it is because the conditions of their case won't let the tidal wave reach them. Retailers in line for prosperity are feeling it in large measure—but not all of them. The new vegetation of prosperity is not yet growing evenly over the entire country, but is spotty. Retailers who are doing business near the spots are in fine condition, some of them better than they have ever been before. And the spots are increasing in size and other spots are appearing between them. Very shortly the country will be fairly well covered, and then nothing can keep prosperity away from the retail trade.

You may curse and criticise premiums all you please; you may say that they are an excrescence upon business; that they increase cost and bring nothing in return—but the fact is, all the same, that premiums are wanted and an article of merchandise with premiums behind it stands a far better chance of succeeding than the same article without premiums.

There is even authority for the statement that its chance may be four times as good. In the Eastern market at the present time two brands of a certain food product are selling side by side. They are made by the same company, though formerly they were not. Though they bear different names, the quality is identical and the price the same. The vital difference is that one is sold with premiums, and the other is not, and that the one with premiums sells four times as largely as the other! It must be the premiums, because there is nothing else it could be. The premiums alone seem to bring this about, notwithstanding the fact that the advertising done for the brand that carries no premiums is much more extensive than the advertising done for the other.

A man with a large and comprehensive experience in getting goods on the market said the other day: "If I were introducing a new article to-day I would unquestionably use some good premium plan in connection with it." From a practical standpoint, he seems to be pretty nearly right.

As reported from Washington in another column, the Stevens bill has been reintroduced in Congress, and the fight for its passage is on.

It is a great pity that the manufacturers who compose the American Fair Trade League, chief sponsors of the bill, have been so stubborn in their refusal to allow it to be amended. It could have been made so much more sensible. The bill's aim is undoubtedly good. It is to prevent the ruthless slaughtering of trade-marked brands. But it goes much further than that, and in my judgment, many times expressed, it would hurt the retailer much more than it would help him.

There were several reasons why the Stevens bill should have been modified. First, it is so radical as to greatly lessen its own chances of passage. Those who have read in the last few issues Mr. Lake's debate with the House Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce over this bill, have seen that the committee is not favorably disposed toward the idea. They seem to think it may lead to monopoly and extortion, and that it may kill individual initiative. They are undoubtedly right. It will tend to do those very things in its present form.

Another reason for modifying the bill is that if it should happen to pass it would prove so radical that probably a great hue and cry would soon go up for its repeal. Thousands of retailers who have enthusiastically demanded the Stevens bill really have no intelligent idea what it is likely to do. They have been told by the manufacturers who chiefly want it passed, that it would kill the cutter. They have no adequate realization that it would also in some respects, kill them, or at least greatly curb them.

Incidentally, the manufacturers may find the Stevens bill reacting upon them. Many buyers of trade-marked merchandise will to-day take a chance. They will stock some new article, with the thought that they will sell as much as they can at the full price, and if they get stuck, they will put a price on what is left and clean it out. If the Stevens bill passes, and the retailer learns that no matter how badly he is stuck, he cannot put a price on the goods and clean them out, without the manufacturer's consent, he will be much slower to buy, and in many cases will probably buy only after he has the manufacturer's written consent to allow him to clean up at a price if he has to.

Selling Talks With Clerks

BY A MAN WHO HAS BEEN ONE

Conducted by W. E. SWEENEY, Manager for L. Lehman & Co.'s Department Food Store, Dover, N. J.

"I Forgot."—My advice is don't forget. I don't mean the little things. I don't mean the things that have little bearing on your life. I mean general instructions and new prices from headquarters. Forgetting a thing in business simply means that your whole interest isn't there. That's clear enough. Now, why isn't your whole interest there. It's because of some discord.

If the truth were told you are making an elephant out of a mole hill. You think the firm is against you. You frame up in your mind the most ridiculously antagonistic pictures and you feel depressed. That's what makes you forget orders. Is that fair to the boss? Not at all. There isn't an employer worthy the name that won't straighten things out when you're ready for a heart-to-heart talk. Do you know what I tell the men under me? I tell them that no matter how big or how little their trouble is, that I want to know it. It's their duty and your duty and my duty to make a clean breast of anything that is interfering with the "I forgot" principle.

Cut Prices.—Said the grocery manager the other day, goods advertised under cut prices were already sold. Meaning that the cuts were so attractive and the ad. itself so strong that the readers mentally bought the goods and they would be paid for next day. Very true, but that doesn't let you out. It lets you in. It lands a hundred people at your counter in a given time when you wouldn't serve twenty-five ordinarily. Let the ad. take care of itself. Your day of work has come. Don't Despise What Can Serve You So Well

No enterprising retailer can afford any longer to despise the food specialties that are from time to time offered him. They are in demand by consumers, and pay a profit which is the life of many a retail store.

But he should discriminate. He should not let his store become the dumping ground for all kinds of specialties, good, bad and indifferent, salable and unsalable. That kind of thing chokes business to death very quickly. He should sign orders only for specialties which are made by responsible houses that use either of the above stamps. If he does that he will know the house is right, the goods are right, and his treatment throughout the whole transaction will be right.

The stamps mean "safety first" in signing specialty orders.

Views of Various Believers in This Doctrine Who Offer Them as Arguments for the Pending Stevens Bill.

[The "Modern Merchant and Grocery World" has obtained and will from time to time present a series of statements by various well-known persons who believe that the manufacturer should have the right to tell the retailer what price he must get for the manufacturer's product. All of the views which will be presented can be taken as arguments for the pending Stevens Bill, which seeks to give a manufacturer that right.—Ed.]

No. 10.—By John A. Lake, Retail Grocer, and First Vice-President of the Michigan State Retail Grocers' and General Merchants' Associations.

NOTE.

Mr. Lake testified before the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce of the House of Representatives in favor of the Stevens bill. His testimony became really an argument between himself and the various members of the committee as to whether the retail prices of food products should ever be fixed by the manufacturer. The argument was so intensely interesting and so closely touches the business of the readers hereof that we have obtained a stenographic report and here present it. It is not only intensely interesting, but gives a vivid glimpse of the feeling of the members of the Congressional Committee on the subject of price regulation.—Ed.

Mr. Barkley. If this bill becomes a law, it would be impossible for a man to mark down a suit of clothes until the manufacturer agreed with the retailer to reduce the price on it after the season was over?

Mr. Lake. If the suit of clothes was damaged or he was closing out his business, or something like that, it would not be an impossibility. But I believe that the average retail clothier who is selling the marked down suit of clothes is selling an inferior article, and the article ought to be marked down.

Mr. Barkley. Suppose the season is over and he has bought more than he has been able to sell of first-class goods. He does not want to carry them over to the next season and he marks them down, and that is done in every town in the United States. He may mark them below the cost, because he wants the money in order to buy spring or fall goods, as the case might be. Now, if this bill passes, if a manufacturer of a suit of clothes fixes a price on the article and compels the retailer to sell it at that price, it would be an impossibility for him to sell it under that price for any reason, would it not?

Mr. Lake. I am not versed in the retail clothing business.

Mr. Barkley. Let me ask you another question. Is it not true that in different localities there is a difference in rents and clerk hire and expenses of the store, and would that not have something to do with the price at which the retailer sells his commodities, and the profit he makes out of them?

Mr. Lake. Yes, sir, that is absolutely true.

Mr. Barkley. Your contention is that the manufacturer ought to be permitted to fix a uniform price for his product regardless of the locality and regardless of the expenses of running the retail store, and thereby fixing a higher profit than the retailer would want or expect?

Mr. Lake. My contention is that the articles that would come under this trade-mark would be so small that they would not seriously affect the earnings of any retail store. They would protect the retail store that was doing an honest and honorable business from cut-rate prices on standard articles used as a bait, and would protect the public also from inferior goods.

Mr. Barkley. A retail merchant doing a dishonorable business does not deal with honorable manufacturers, does he?

Mr. Lake. He deals with enough of them to get goods of a reliable nature to use as a bait at least.

Mr. Barkley. The question I am interested in is whether the public, the consumer, is benefited by permitting the manufacturer to fix the price of the article so that the retailer cannot sell it under that price, even though he might be justified in doing so and still make a reasonable profit.

Mr. Lake. The consumer—I tried to make that clear—under such a law, allowing a just merchant and a just consumer to be the judges. Both would be apt to get better value under a fixed price for a certain article than he would be under an open market, where cutting and slashing was allowed.

Mr. O'Shaunessy. Is it because the consumer gets skinned in another direction when he gets a benefit in the purchase of one article? You say there is a bait thrown out in the way of a good article, then they take the opportunity to skin him in other directions?

Mr. Lake. Yes, sir.

Mr. O'Shaunessy. Then in the final analysis, he is the loser?

Mr. Lake. He is the loser; yes, sir.

Mr. Barkley. Would any law that Congress can pass ever prevent consumers from getting skinned, if they are willing to be skinned?

Mr. Lake. No; I do not know that there is one. I never saw any profession but had its skinning at some time or other. We all get it.

The Chairman. Is it not probable that fixing this price on the patented and copyrighted articles will enable what you call the dishonorable dealers to make more out of them and then skin folks on the other articles when they are not looking?

Mr. Lake. If this law will do as I expect, it will develop a better class of men in business and would not produce that result.

The Chairman. I want to ask you about the term "dishonorable dealers." I believe that term has been used several times. Is that used to denote those men who cut prices and undersell others?

Mr. Lake. No, sir; it is mentioned against men who use unscrupulous business methods whereby the public is not getting value received for the price they pay.

The Chairman. Will this legislation remedy those methods?

Mr. Lake. It will; yes, sir.

The Chairman. What are some of those methods?

Mr. Lake. They are methods that all of us run against and methods that are being remedied. In the first place, I will take a package of Ivory soap that costs the retailer 4 cents. If a retailer wants to advertise that at 4 cents he throws in his services, his rent, what he pays for labor, the exact cost of handling that article, and he does it not to benefit the consumer, but for the sole purpose of getting the profit on that Ivory soap out of that consumer from some other article of which the consumer does not know the value.

Mr. O'Shaunessy. Or more than the profit?

Mr. Lake. Or more than the profit.

Mr. O'Shaunessy. How many articles are embraced by this bill; how many articles are covered?

Mr. Lake. No number, I believe, is mentioned.

Mr. O'Shaunessy. Tell me some of the things it would cover.

Mr. Lake. It might cover any package goods or special brands put up in packages.

Mr. O'Shaunessy. The Gold Dust Soap?

Mr. Lake. The Gold Dust washing powder.

Mr. O'Shaunessy. The Gold Dust washing powder. What does this bill cover? Proprietary articles—is that what it covers mostly?

Mr. Lake. It covers proprietary articles mostly. It could not cover flour and sugar or such goods as that.

Mr. Sims. This bill says, "Under trade-mark or special brand," therefore it cannot cover such goods; they do not come under a trade-mark or a special brand.

Mr. Barkley. Would it cover such an article as Gold Medal flour, which is advertised?

Mr. Lake. I do not believe that the manufacturer of such an article would be foolish enough to take advantage of this law, for the simple reason that the basis of flour is a fluctuating article, and if he fixes the price of it, at one time he would be too low; the next time he would be too high, and it seems to me as though it would be detrimental for such a concern to put their flour under a trade-mark and a fixed price.

Mr. Barkley. If the Government says that the manufacturer by an affirmative law may fix a price on his article which shall follow that article into the most remote communities of this country and be sold at that price, it will follow as a logical conclusion that it will eventually compel the Government to inquire into the reasonableness of that price so as to determine whether the manufacturer is fixing the price too high and is making too much profit. Would that not be in the nature of the Government regulating the price of manufactured articles by permitting him to regulate it, and either keeping our hands off his regulations or stepping in and saying: "You are fixing this price too high to the public."

More About the Profit on Cream of Wheat

Correspondent Discusses the Subject, Apropos of Recent Article. Praises Wheat Cereals and Says Retailer's Profit on Cream of Wheat is Twenty Per Cent. When Sold at Fifteen Cents. This is a Mistake; the Gross Profit is Under Seventeen Per Cent.

We have received a letter regarding a recent article in this paper as to the profit on Cream of Wheat. The article referred to reproduced a letter which had been written to the "American Miller," comparing the price paid by the consumer for a certain unnamed wheat breakfast food, with the price of wheat. All of the facts and figures in the article were contained in the letter to the "American Miller," and we are not responsible for them. The inference that Cream of Wheat was meant was ours, and it may have been wrong, of course. The writer of the following letter asks that it be not published, but we believe that certain parts of it should be. We therefore reproduce them below, withholding the writer's name and address:—

The superior food value of wheat cereal products has been a matter of public knowledge through the various publications of the Government at their experiment stations, the analyses that have been made, and the good judgment of economical housewives throughout the country. When, for 15 cents, one may purchase from 45 to 55 ample breakfast portions of a nutritious, appetizing cereal food, it is invidious to try to detract from that value by false statements and false estimates of the cost to consumers, such as are contained in this article that we refer to.

Furthermore, as to grocers' profits on an article selling on the basis of Cream of Wheat, the grocer makes 20 per cent. on his investment in Cream of Wheat. In selling Cream of Wheat he needs no paper, no string, no time of the salesman in doing up the package, no time of the salesman in talking up the goods, because the demand is created for him by the manufacturer, and the customer, when she comes into the store, knows what she wants, or when she orders by telephone or from order clerk.

We have no criticism of any of the above except the statement that the retailer makes 20 per cent. on Cream of Wheat. The writer of the above says "20 per cent. on his investment." We suppose he means gross profit, and if he does mean that he is mistaken. Cream of Wheat costs the retailer $4.50 for 36 packages, or 12½ cents a package. At 15 cents selling price, the gross profit is 16⅓ per cent., figuring the profit on the selling price, which everybody says is the correct thing to do. Sixteen and one-third per cent. is ⅔ per cent. less than the bare cost of doing business. The retailer doesn't even come out whole, even when he gets 15 cents. The Cream of Wheat Co., however, has suggested in various ways that it regards 14 cents as a fair average retail selling price; that is the figure at which it wished the Great Atlantic and Pacific Tea Co. to sell its product. At 14 cents the average retailer makes 10 5-7 per cent. gross, losing 6 2-7 per cent. on every sale!

Government Refuses to Modify Its Strict Definition of Java Coffee.

Coffee Men Recently Asked Department to Loosen Up the Ruling on the Ground That It Prevented a Lot of Coffee From Being Called Java That Was Really Java Coffee. Government Considers Request and Refuses It.

Special Correspondence of "Modern Merchant and Grocery World."

Washington, D. C.,

December 23, 1915.

Food Inspection Decision No. 82, which limits the use of the term "Java," under the Food and Drugs Act, to coffee produced on the island of Java, will not be changed, according to a forthcoming issue of the Service and Regulatory Announcements of the Bureau of Chemistry. Certain members of the coffee trade requested the Bureau of Chemistry to recommend the modification of Food Inspection Decision No. 82 to the extent of allowing coffee produced on the island of Sumatra, or other islands of the Dutch East Indies, to be imported and shipped into interstate commerce as Java coffee. It was claimed by the trade that the coffee produced on the island of Sumatra is equal, or superior, in quality to that produced on the island of Java.

The Food and Drugs Act provides that any food or drug product shall be deemed to be misbranded which is falsely branded as to the State, territory, or country in which it is manufactured or produced. The Bureau of Chemistry therefore is of the opinion that, under the terms of the Food and Drugs Act, even if the coffee produced on the island of Sumatra is equal, or superior, to that produced on the island of Java, it cannot be imported into this country or shipped into interstate commerce labeled as Java coffee.

The Service and Regulatory announcement follows:—

At a hearing held on June 5, 1915, the Bureau of Chemistry was requested to recommend to the Secretary of Agriculture a modification or revocation of Food Inspection Decision No. 82. Representations made at this hearing and those communicated to the Bureau by correspondence have been considered. The request is denied.

Canvass of Wholesale Grocery Business Show Good Condition Almost Everywhere. First Fraudulent Advertising Case Ends in Retailer's Conviction. Market Summary.

Special Correspondence of "Modern Merchant and Grocery World."

New York, December 24, 1915.

An interesting summary of the condition of the grocery business in all States of the Union was published during the week by the "Journal of Commerce" of this city. While the summary is too lengthy to reproduce here, the conclusions which are drawn from it by the paper itself will be interesting and appear below:—

Probably no line of business furnishes so accurate a barometer of trade and industrial conditions throughout the country as the grocery trade. It is the one line of business which trades with the same customers every day, year in and year out, and which all people must patronize daily. Therefore, the character of grocery movements may be regarded as indicating with accuracy the buying disposition of the whole people; and that in turn the popular temperamental feeling in regard to the future.

In the course of its current investigation into business conditions "The Journal of Commerce" wired a number of representative grocers in all parts of the country asking the result of their own observations in their particular sections.

Speaking generally, there is a marked tone of optimism in the replies. In some centers of trade, recovery from the long depression and the era of hand-to-mouth purchasing of groceries have been so recent as to still leave jobbers conservative in their discernment of good times coming, but with hardly an exception, the past six months is reported as emphatically ahead of comparative periods of recent years, while most centers find reason for genuine enthusiasm.

Only two spots show any marked depression: Central Indiana, where industries are said to be partially idle, and on the north Pacific coast, where the scarcity of ships for cargo carrying has dealt a severe blow to the lumber interests on which that section so largely depends. Against this, however, is the state of elation in the north Central States, especially in the grain belt, and the South is reported to be enjoying prosperity "like the good old days." New England is busy and manufacturing districts enjoying war orders are in high feather.

Everywhere there are reports of plentiful money, free investment of capital and a disposition to trust the present as a time for expansion and development. It may be, as a correspondent from Maine says, that workingmen are not receiving increased wages in keeping with the increased prices of commodities, but that section and Indiana appear to be the only places where prosperity is not reflected in the buying power and disposition.

The general feeling disclosed by the reports from the various States is one of both present and future confidence in a large and profitable business during the coming year.

In a recent issue reference was made to the case brought for some time in this city under the False Advertising Act. The defendant was Abraham Goldstein, manager of a men's furnishing store at 1679 Broadway, and he was arrested for having represented through a sign in his window that he had Manhattan shirts on sale, although the fact was that the shirts he was selling were not Manhattan shirts at all. This case, which was brought by the Wholesale Men's Furnishing Association, came up for trial during the week. It appeared that Goldstein, in order to provide a defense for himself in case anything should come of his sign, had printed the word "Borough" in large letters immediately under the large word "Manhattan," this being a clumsy effort to furnish foundation for the argument that what he had represented he was selling was Manhattan Borough shirts instead of Manhattan shirts. Goldstein was quickly convicted and fined $100.

The association gave out a statement after the case was over that it had divided the city into districts and would bring similar prosecutions wherever they could find rea-

SUMMARIZED MARKET CONDITIONS.

Tea quiet on account of holiday season. No change in price.—Coffee quiet and heavy with Brazils slightly easier except Rio 7s, which are scarce. Mild coffees dull with outlook lower.—All sugar refiners on 5.95 basis for granulated. Raws somewhat lower than a week ago. Situation still tense, but will tend downward soon.—Prunes dull at the moment. Prices unchanged. Other dried fruits fairly active and all firm, largely because of scarcity.—Domestic sardines strong and expected to advance after the first of the year. Imported sardines scarce and very high. Canned salmon quiet and steady to firm.—Canned tomatoes firmer and higher. Inside price here in a large way about $1.25 for Maryland standard No. 3s. Other canned goods unchanged.—Wheat shows fluctuations but ends the week in reaction from advance.—Flour a shade firmer than a week ago. Demand for consumption moderate.

The Grocery Markets

Tea.

The tea market has shown no change for the week. The holiday season has made its usual inroads into the demand and only those buyers are taking tea who need it at the moment. Prices show no change since last week.

Coffee.

The coffee market is undeniably dull and heavy. There is too much Rio and Santos coffee about, although this does not refer so much to Rio 7s as it does to other grades. Rio 7s are comparatively scarce and the price is steady to firm on last week's basis. Other grades of Brazils are in large supply and the feeling is stagnant. Milds at the moment are very steady and in fair demand, but the new crop has begun to come forward and from now on the tendency should be downward. Java and Mocha unchanged and quiet.

Sugar.

The sugar market has had some fluctuations during the week. Raws have declined somewhat owing to the steady progress of the new Cuban season and quotations range from 4.51 to 4.69 cents. All refiners are asking 5.95 cents for granulated at the present writing. Beet granulated can be obtained in Eastern markets for around 5.85 cents, with a possibility of a lower price in the near future. There seems to be plenty of beet granulated around and the refiners are certainly making a great killing this year. The consumptive demand for refined sugar is good.

Syrup and Molasses.

Glucose remains unchanged for the week, as does compound. The demand is seasonably good. The sugar market is unchanged and quiet, prices being steady to firm. Milds firm by reason of short prospective supply; prices comparatively high.

Fish.

The market for fish shows no material change for the week. Momentarily mackerel are neglected and will probably continue dull until after the first of the year. Prices are still firm by reason of light supply, and there appears to be no reason for expecting the supply to be anything else than light for several months. Some territories, however, have reduced their quotations of new Norway mackerel during the week, largely because of irregular quality. Cod, hake and haddock are in seasonably good demand at unchanged prices. Salmon is unchanged in all grades. Demand fair. Sardines, both domestic and imported, are very firm on account of light stocks. Domestic sardines appear quite likely to advance in the near future.

Canned Goods.

There is practically no change in the market on corn and peas, but tomatoes show unusual strength for this season of the year. The general asking price is now $1.05 f. o. b. factory. Buying is restricted to actual requirements, or the market would go much higher. There is no question but what the shortage in tomatoes will exhibit a steady rising market from now on until next packing season. Other canned goods are having the usual season's demand. California canned fruits are selling well, owing to the low prices and there is some demand from the jobbers for additional supplies.

Dried Fruits.

Absolutely no change has occurred in dried fruits and none is looked for until after the turn of the year. Fair demand. Currants are in very light supply and practically all offerings are immediately absorbed.

Beans and Peas.

The bean market still remains strong and unchanged at the former high figures that are being fully maintained. Lima beans are low in comparison with pea beans and marrows and an advance is looked for shortly. Green and Scotch peas are strong, with slight advance.

Butter.

The butter market is unchanged and there is a very good demand for all grades. Receipts are light, only a small proportion being of fancy quality.

Eggs.

The egg market continues firm on fresh stock at unchanged prices. The receipts are light for the time of year and some of the invoices show unattractive quality. Good stock commands full prices. No change in quotations is looked for within the next few days. Good demand.

Cheese.

The cheese market is unchanged in prices and there is only a light demand. Receipts are moderate.

Provisions.

The entire line of provisions is unchanged except pure lard and compound, which are a trifle higher in price this week. The demand is fairly good.

INDIVIDUAL MARKET REPORTS.

Imported Fish Specialties.

Our last week's market report covers the situation practically as it is to-day, and we have nothing to add. At the end of this year we shall, as usual, issue a Market Report, reviewing the past year's situation in our goods, which probably will prove rather interesting.

In the meanwhile, the herring business continues in the same condition as reported last week. Holland herrings are only in hand-to-mouth demand, owing to the extremely high prices prevailing. The same may be said of Scotch herrings. Norway herrings are selling in a hand-to-mouth way to consuming demand, and prices are as high as ever. The fishing of sloop herrings has commenced, and it seems that the countries at war are not so very anxious any more to buy those herrings at the tremendously high prices, but even at reduced prices, the prices for those sloop herrings are way beyond the views of our buyers and ours, so now no sloop herrings will be forthcoming until prices come down, if they will come down at all.

Stocks of all kinds of imported sardines are very unimportant here. Prices are held very high, but even at the high prices which are being asked for them, they are way below European parity, and cannot be imported at the prices which they are being offered to the trade here. The demand is just fair, nothing but a hand-to-mouth demand for the reason that prices are really very high, although not nearly as high as in Europe.

STROHMMEYER & ARPE Co.

New York.

Standard Canned Goods.

An active and a stronger market for tomatoes prevailed again throughout this section, and the outlook is toward a still stronger market after inventory time. The basis for the advance is not unreasonable; in fact, it is justifiable by an analysis of the official statistics of the canning season as compiled by the National Cannery Association. The pack this past season was the smallest since 1905, 8,469,000 cases, of which, say, 50 per cent. has been sold and put in line for consumption. Well-posted men here figure that the sales to date are 60 per cent. of the output, which is indicated by the weekly reports of the Tomato Cannery Section to the National Association headquarters in Washington. When the market price of No. 3 standard tomatoes declined to 65 cents a dozen last spring the carry-over from the 1914 pack began to melt away so rapidly, chiefly in small shipments, that a reaction set in which gradually gained strength as the canning season opened up. When the shortage in the output became apparent there was additional momentum to the demand, which gained force when the official statistics were published on December 1st. Viewed from any angle, the perspective seems to be favorable to the holders of tomatoes. Pick up any good trades that may be offered.

The buying of tomatoes, while not so large in volume, was sufficient to cause a further advance in the prices, and at the close the outlook is favorable for continued activity, unless the holiday season interferes. Further orders from Western States indicate that the outside markets are gradually conforming to the advance in the prices here, which is rather quicker than was expected. The buying orders embrace all sizes of tins. Anticipate your requirements for the next three or four months, to some extent at least, and keep your stocks in a comfortable position in expectation of higher prices, which seem to be inevitable.

'Twas a dull market for canned fruits. We do not expect any activity in them until after the turn of the year, until inventory time is over. The prices continue to be firm and there is no weak spot.

The increased cost of the raw stock causes a strong market for cove oysters, and the trend is toward a higher level of prices. A spell of freezing weather would bring more activity in them.

North Carolina Grocery Clerk Says Some Stirring Things for Other Clerks

Scores Clock-Watchers and Clerks of No Ambition. They Neither Serve Themselves Nor Please Employers.

Among the clerks of our city there is not one who does not desire to advance.

If we stop and undertake to merely hold our own without advancing, we soon find we are gradually losing what we already have. The very first and best preparation for advancement is be ready and prepared.

And the best way of being prepared is work (just old-fashioned hard work).

It is useless for a man to expect advancement unless he knows the least as well as the most important parts of his business. He must know how it's all done so if he becomes manager or owner he can advise and instruct how all things must be done.

Most every successful business man has started down at the bottom and gradually climbed the so-called ladder to success."

Be the very best help right where you are.

It means "do more than you are paid for."

And you will find you are always giving your boss his rights.

Did you ever think what your boss does for you? He of course furnishes the very means with which you support life. Then ask yourself what you are furnishing in return.

No man earns his wages no matter how small they may be unless he is interested in his work. You may watch him—he will constantly be stealing or shirking on his job.

Did you ever notice a man who is always watching the clock and is always ready to leave promptly at quitting time? And did you ever notice that he has never yet pleased man by whom he has been employed? The salesman who has success is the one who is always seeking a new customer and using all the skill and energy possible to sell the old ones (and he holds them).

When you tell a customer you will have her goods to her on time, do it. If your wagon breaks catch the next car to her home in order to hold her confidence. The next day you will find you are gradually increasing her sales and if she is partly trading somewhere else you will soon draw all her trade.

-In studying self-mastery will power is one of the most important considerations. The development should be solely based on self-confidence, and trying to develop without this will is like trying to start a bank without capital.

In many cases men have been kept back by being taught that they were not able and talented enough to do great things. A man should know he is able to accomplish what he wants, as he knows he is able to lift a ten-pound weight. I will assure you this confidence will always carry you through.

Let us all strive to make our business a better success from day to day. When we do this we can live easier, better, and more honorably.

Peculiar Mix-up Over Labeling Chinese Eggs.

A Portland, Ore., grocer has just been fined $100 for selling a cake made of Chinese eggs, but not so labeled. An appeal will be taken to the Supreme Court of Oregon in order to determine whether the law passed by the 1915 Legislature, which says that food products in which imported eggs are used shall be labeled to that effect, is constitutional. The circuit judge held the law to be constitutional. But down in California, where they have a similar law, the circuit judge held the law unconstitutional. As both cases are to go to the Supreme Courts in their respective States the outcome will be awaited with interest.

Another One of Them New Years.

Well, here we all are, standing on the front step of another new year.

Gee, I wonder how many times I've wrote that. It's been some string of years, believe me! When I wrote it the first time, I was young and pretty—them that knew said I was one of the handsomest bloods they ever saw. In them days I had more hair and less tummy. Oh, well, you can't have everything, but it seems a blamed shame that most people have to be long on what they don't want and short on what they do.

But I ain't bad looking yet, if I do say it as shouldn't. I might be a heap worse, though one rude roughneck told me the other day he didn't see how. I don't have the least particle of respect for him—he don't know a good thing when he sees one.

There's been a lot of changes since I wrote "Here we are, on the front step of another year," the first time. Some of the boys are dead, some of 'em are out of business, one or two because they've made enough money to quit, and some because they had to quit. Some fellows that were clerks when I started in to write, have got bully stores of their own, and some that had their own stores then are clerking for somebody else now.

I know one who is working to-day for a man who was his own clerk fifteen years ago.

If I'm able to hang on for another fifteen years, I suppose there'll be just as many more changes, of the same kind. I hate to think what I'll be like in fifteen years. I'll bet I don't have a tooth left—it'll be my luck to be eating soup out of a sponge. Maybe instead of selling goods on the road at $20,000 a year (don't wake me!) I'll be selling collar buttons on the corner. Oh me oh my, but ain't life cruel?

Here I am going on something fierce. This ain't what I started out to say at all! What did I start out to say? Dadburn it, you've made me forget all about it! Oh, I know what it was—it was to do some prophesying about what's going to happen in 1916.

My long suit is doing the prophet stunt. It's great sport to me to sit down on the front step of a new year and blab about what'll happen in it. If none of it comes true, it don't make any difference, because even the little bunch that pay any attention forget what I said in five minutes.

And if any of it does come true I can crow like a rooster over it and remind everybody that I said so.

Ain't I the little fat fox?

What I feel sure is going to happen in 1916 is this: I'll bet a million peanuts that by the end of 1916 the expenses of thousands of fellows in the grocery business are going to be less than they are to-day. How do I know that? Because they'll have to be less if they're going to meet competition, that's why I know it. By the average man I don't mean the fellow in some town where he's having the same kind of easy competition he's had for twenty years. He's on easy street, that guy. He'll go on just the same, getting fatter and fatter and seeing his children grow up, and sleeping every night, and not having anything to worry over—I don't mean him at all.

I mean the grocer whose store is in the thick of the Economy stores and the chain stores. If he's going to last out 1916, he can take it from me, he's got to cut down his cost of doing business!

I walked down Market street in Philadelphia the other day and there was a fellow selling shirts. He had a window full of 'em and a store full, all in the boxes that they came from the factory in. No counter, no nothing except the shirts and the boss. In the window he had a sign he's printed himself—"One Man Store."

I went in, and this was the stunt: He had some cards over the boxes showing the different sizes. You walked up and looked at 'em yourself. If you wanted any you picked 'em out of the box, walked over to a table where there was some paper and string, and wrapped 'em up yourself. Then you paid the boss 98 cents apiece for 'em and walked out.

I didn't buy any, because the only 16½ he had was baby blue, which ain't my color. I got to have a color that don't show dirt quick.

But there he was—he didn't have any expense at all much, outside of rent. Can't you see the bulge fellow like that has got on a store that has a lot of clerks and a cashier and glass cases and a lot of stuff?

He was selling shirts, too—there was a bunch in there buying. I ain't much of a judge of shirts—my wife buys mine and I guess she'll look it. But they looked like the kind you pay $1.50 for.

Now there it is. From what I've seen, I don't believe one store out of ten has got its expenses down as low as they could be. Nowhere near! Either there are too many clerks for the business, or delivery costs too much, or something. I tell you, there ain't anything that grows on you like expenses. When they'll grow over night if you let 'em.

I told a customer of mine something the other day. He was kicking about his clerks—he wasn't getting enough work out of 'em, he said. He had five and he paid on $16 a week, two more $14 and the

Specializing Lima Beans.

For these busy days a window that is easy to arrange is desirable. The lima bean display requires a platform, which may be composed of two flat boxes. Along the sides tack strips of cardboard extending upward one inch, so that the mound of beans will stay in place. Cover the sides of the platform in a dark color the same as the floor. Next apply a border top and bottom of scalloped white paper, made from a straight three-inch strip, cutting the scallops all at once by laying in four-inch folds. Tie up some beans in one-pound packages and place as shown in illustration, running a twisted strip of white paper from the platform to each pyramid. A curtain of blue, bordered in white scallops, is drawn across the back.

her two $13 and $12. Sixty-nine dollars for all.

"Know what I'd do?" I said. "I'd fire the poorest one and put it up to the other four to do all the work at a couple of dollars more a week. You'd save some money and you'd do a better business. I know your bunch of clerks pretty well—we've been around the store a good bit, and there ain't a bit of doubt that four could do all the work and they wouldn't get in each other's way as much as they do now."

"I'd do more, too—I'd give each one of the four a bonus on all the trade they did over what they did the first. But if they lost me any customer because they worried her so much to buy stuff, then I'd bring their little necks. Think they couldn't work? Why it would make live wires out of sticks, that's what it would do to them!"

"I tell you, when you cut down expenses and at the same time do more business, you're going some, ain't you? Well, take it from me, it can be done and a lot of fellows we got to do it."

THE STROLLER.

Pennsylvania Organization Notes.

Spaces in the Pittsburgh Food Show are being rapidly taken up. This promises to be a big event.

The Pittsburgh Grocers' Association gave an informal reception and entertainment to its members on the evening of December 20th.

The newly organized Wilkesburg Business Men's Association is making good progress. It has permanent headquarters and meeting rooms, a paid secretary and is establishing an up-to-the-minute credit reporting and rating system.

A large number of the merchants of the State are making application for workmen's compensation insurance in the Pennsylvania Mutual Liability Association, of Huntingdon, Pa. This company is made up of business men of the State and is indorsed by many influential commercial bodies.

The Pittsburgh Retail Grocers' Protective Union nominated officers for the coming year at its meeting on December 20th.

The health authorities of Butler are planning to introduce an ordinance into the councils for the protection of patrons of fruit, produce and grocery stores whose goods are displayed on the sidewalks.

After the ordinance has been approved by the State health authorities it will be presented to Councils, and when passed will be strictly enforced.

The State law on the subject is as follows:—

No firm, person or corporation shall expose for sale on any sidewalk or pavement or other exposed place any fruit, vegetables or other articles of food which are eaten uncooked, unless such articles of food are thoroughly screened and protected from flies and unless they are on elevated stands at least 24 inches above the level of the sidewalk or pavement.

The Zelionople Association is becoming active.

Organizer Smedley addressed the Butler Grocers' Association on December 13th. Despite the inclemency of the weather the attendance was good and the meeting was full of interest.

This organization is made up of live grocers and a more loyal lot of men it would be hard to find.

The association is a helpful force.

Organizer Smedley addressed the retail merchants of New Brighton on the evening of December 14th. The attendance was small, but the meeting was full of interest. The New Brighton Association is one of the best in the State and does a lot of good for its members.

The Wilkesburg Association has joined the State Association.

W. C. Wood, the new secretary of the Butler Business Men's Association, is a newcomer into the secretarial field, but he is destined to take a prominent place. He is a gentleman of great force and is already highly respected by his association.

One reason why so many associations do not command as much respect from their members is because the scope of their activities is so limited. They should broaden out. Infrequent meetings is another source of trouble. They should be held regularly and frequently. Something of interest should be presented at each meeting. The members should be encouraged to get the "meeting" habit. It will grow on them. Some organizations place all the responsibility for success on the officers, forgetting to do their part. An organization should be a business affair, conducted by business men for business.

Use of Parcels Post for Food Products a Matter of Judgment.

Investigation into the problems of transportation and storage has been carried on during the past year by the Department of Agriculture with a view to determining the causes of the great loss of foodstuffs between the producer and the consumer. Experimental shipments by parcel post and express were made during the year with many kinds of fruits and berries, lettuce, milk, butter, eggs, syrup and vegetables. In nearly every case it was found that the success of the shipment depended upon the judgment used in selecting the quality of the product and the type of container.

No. 343.—A New Decision on the Liability of Mercantile Agencies for Incorrect Credit Information.

I suppose practically every man who is in business for himself has at some time or other had to ask a mercantile agency for information as to the financial standing of a customer or prospective customer; or has himself been the subject of such an inquiry by somebody else. I have therefore always assumed that the entire body of the readers of these articles would be interested in a discussion of the legal liability of mercantile agencies for information which they give out, reflecting upon the credit of some business man. I have published everything along this line I could dig up from time to time, and shall continue to publish it when I can get it. There are two phases of the liability of a mercantile agency in such a case: 1, its liability to the man whose credit is reflected upon if the statements made were untrue; and 2, its liability to a creditor who gives credit to a man whose standing the agency says is good, where on the contrary it is bad.

The law which applies to the professional mercantile agencies like Dun's and Bradstreet's, also applies to the rating and credit departments conducted by mercantile organizations.

As I have pointed out in previous articles, the law on the liability of mercantile agencies, for untrue credit information, is in a nutshell, that the agency is responsible in damages only where it could be shown to have been guilty of gross negligence. For untrue information, given out merely through mistake, the agency has in most cases been held not to be liable, even though some subscriber relied on it and made a loss.

The Appellate Division of the New York State Supreme Court has just handed down a decision which indicates, it seems to me, a tendency to hold the agencies to a stricter account than in the past.

This is well, in my judgment. If I pay a mercantile agency $125 a year to supply me with information by which I can decide whether to trust out goods or not, I have a right to expect the agency will not give me information which it has not thoroughly sifted.

The case referred to was brought by Alexander J. Munro, a Chicago jobber, against the Bradstreet Co. Munro was a subscriber to the Bradstreet service, and asked them one day for a report on a New York concern named Jackson & Sulzer, which he proposed to sell to. Bradstreet's Chicago office said they had no special report there, but if Munro would pay for the telegram, they would wire New York for one. This was done, and the report came. It said that a representative of Bradstreet's had just called on Jackson & Sulzer and found that their credit was good. Munro thereupon gave them credit and in a few days they went into bankruptcy and Munro lost practically the entire account. This happened in August.

Munro investigated and learned that Bradstreet had not made any call on Jackson & Sulzer in August, as they said, but merely went on a report they had obtained in the February before, when Jackson & Sulzer's credit was really all right. Munro thereupon sued Bradstreet's for damages. He brought his case in New York, and after hearing it, the lower court threw it out, on the ground that Bradstreet's had saved itself by inserting the following in its contract with Munro and all other subscribers: "That the said company shall not be liable for any loss or injury caused by the negligence or other act of said company or any of its officers, agents or employees, in procuring, collecting and communicating such information."

After his case was dismissed, Munro appealed, and the Appellate Division by a vote of 3 to 2, sustained him. By a majority vote the court said the case should not have been dismissed, but should have gone to a jury. I take the following from the majority opinion:—

On the evidence adduced in behalf of the plaintiff (Munro), the jury would have been justified in finding gross negligence on the part of the defendant by which the plaintiff was misled to his loss, giving credit to an insolvent firm. * * * The contract must be given a construction which will entitle the plaintiff to receive something for the large annual payments. * * * A reasonable construction, I think, merely relieves the defendant from errors and mistakes, but not from knowingly making false reports, or from gross mistakes or negligence by which reports which are wholly false with respect to the action taken by the defendant * * * are made. The evidence would justify a finding of gross negligence and also that defendant was guilty of constructive fraud in thus misrepresenting the financial credit of the firm to the plaintiff, thereby leading if not inducing him to extend credit.

Two judges thought that the agency ought not to be held liable under the former view of the law which has always made it extremely difficult to fasten any

Possible Cases Under New Pennsylvania Workmen's Compensation Act

Becomes Operative Next January 1st, and Makes all Retail Merchants Within the State Liable for Accidents to Their Employees While Latter are at Work.

[Inasmuch as the new Pennsylvania Workmen's Compensation Law, which becomes operative next January 1st, affects every grocer and general storekeeper within the State, the "Modern Merchant and Grocery World" will publish from time to time some possible cases which may arise under it, in the experience of the average grocer or general storekeeper. A full digest of the act was published in the issue of July 26th last. Readers hereof will remember that it practically makes it compulsory for employers to pay damages to employees who meet with accidents in the course of their regular work.—Ed.]

Possible Case No. 13.

John Jones & Co., retail grocers, have a large business and a capital of about $40,000. They employ a considerable number of clerks, delivery men, etc., and are of course subject to the Workmen's Compensation Act. They decide to accept its provisions and to insure their risks, but are in doubt as to how. Under the act four courses are open:—

1—Insure with the new State Insurance Department, which is created especially to supply insurance under the new act. The State supplies insurance at 10 per cent. below the rates of the regular companies, which reduction, however, would not amount to much in the case of the average small employer. Another reason why many are hesitating to insure with the State is that there is some doubt under the act, whether the State is going to have enough money to carry the risks.

2—Insure in a regular liability insurance company.

3—Insure in an employers' indemnity company, which the law allows to be organized for the purpose of supplying insurance under this act. It is an organization formed by employers themselves and is purely mutual. A few of these have been organized throughout the State, but not many, and they have mostly included only large employers.

4—Obtain exemption from the State, which would make insurance unnecessary. Under the act an employer who can convince the State that he is financially able to take care of any expenditure may be put to under the act, is absolved from the need to take out insurance. This is equivalent to carrying one's own insurance, and is the last course to be adopted, in the writer's judgment, under the Workmen's Compensation Act.

an agency which gave out untrue reports.

Considering how fully thousands of business houses rely upon the credit information furnished by the agencies, and how very hard it has always been to make the agency and the loss when its information turned out bad, this New York case will prove generally interesting.

Question: A. J. Hazel, Boalsburg, Pa.—I have a customer who has been in the habit of having his check cashed by me. June 21st he cashed one for $35. It went to protest. He promised to redeem it but thus far has failed to do so. There are at least a half dozen other checks (his checks) that have been cashed in town. Some of his creditors have issued executions against his property but thus far have not proceeded against him. He owes me $51 for merchandise. What shall I do? Shall I have him arrested? Do you think you could collect it for me? Both check and bill for merchandise. If you want to try to collect the bills, what shape do you want the bills?

He owns a property worth about $1,000 or a bit more, against which there is a judgment of $1,700 and another of $1,500 which is probably a lien.

Answer.—My judgment is that this man should be arrested. You have waited rather long to do it, but it is still within the time limit. On the face of it he appears to have been guilty of a criminal offense and arrest is undoubtedly the best remedy.

Naturally this applies only to the $35 check. I should start a civil suit against him for the $51.

NOTE.—Requests for information in this department should tersely set out all the facts bearing on the case. All questions should be carefully worded to avoid misconstruction. Write on one side of the sheet only. Letters should be received at this office not later than Tuesday of each week, to ensure an answer in the Monday's issue following. The signature and address of the writer must accompany all inquiries, and will be published unless there is a request not to do so. All inquiries received will be answered without charge. Address all communications to Legal Editor "Modern Merchant and Grocery World."

Goods Business Far Ahead of Last Year.

Marshall Field & Co., in their weekly review of the dry goods trade, say:—

Current wholesale distribution of dry goods is far in excess of the corresponding period of a year ago. Reasonable weather, together with the record breaking holiday business that retailers all over the country are doing, is largely responsible for this increase.

Road sales, for both immediate and spring delivery, continue to be larger than the corresponding period for the past few years, and customers have been in the market in greater numbers.

Collections are satisfactory.

Prices are firm.

Look How Our Condensed Milk is Selling in China.

Well-Known American Brands Have Acquired a Regular Trade at Very Moderate Prices. Swiss Brand Seems to Lead the Market.

Special Correspondence of "Modern Merchant and Grocery World."

Washington, D. C.,

December 23, 1915.

The American Consul at Swatow, China, writes interestingly about how American condensed milk is selling in China. He says that the milks sold in that market are Eagle Brand (American), St. Charles Cream (American), Shepherds' Brand and Milkmaid Brand (Anglo-Swiss). Milkmaid Brand seems to dominate on the local market. The Anglo-Swiss Condensed Milk Co., which manufactures this brand, has established strong agencies in all parts of China. At Canton and Hongkong there are also agencies. The Canton office has adopted the plan of making its young traveling salesmen master the Chinese language, which is of great help in establishing and supervising native agencies and in advertising propaganda. This policy, which has been used to great advantage by the Standard Oil Co. and the British-American Tobacco Co., has borne fruit, as the increased sales of Milkmaid Brand testify.

Eagle milk sells at 17 cents, St. Charles cream at 11, Blue Label Milkmaid at 14 cents and Black Label Milkmaid at 16. Nestle's Food retails at 30 cents.

The Consul writes:—

There appears to be no reason why enterprising American condensed milk manufacturers should not be able to compete successfully in this market. The article is a food product, a demand for which exists and can be increased enormously among the prosperous Chinese. A certain amount of patience, the expenditure of some money for advertising purposes and courage to bear a "cut-rate" campaign that may be inaugurated by competitors already in the field, are all that are needed.

What's In a Name?

The name of every National Biscuit Company product has a selling value to the grocer. Biscuit baked by us bear names persistently advertised and easily recalled—names backed by the highest baking skill.

Your customers know what to ask for by name if you carry N. B. C. goods. You do not have to explain or insist that "they're just as good," as does a grocer who sells an unknown kind.

You can see the advantage of selling the best biscuit baked. Grocers who sell National Biscuit Company products hold the most desirable trade in any community.

removed by order of the Department of Agriculture, effective January 1, 1916. This permits a number of potato producing countries to resume shipment of potatoes to the United States. In the case of Canada, the new order, in addition to removing the quarantine, provides that potatoes may be shipped in without certification by Canadian officials, under an arrangement with the Canadian Minister of Agriculture that Canada will offer for export to the United States only potatoes free from injurious diseases and insect pests. The removal of the foreign quarantine for powdery scab follows the lifting of the domestic quarantine against this disease September 1, 1915.

330 WALNUT STREET :: PHILADELPHIA, PA.

Scranton, Pa., Dec. 11, 1915.
Editor "Science of Advertising."

Dear Sir:—Inclosed you will find a copy of a weekly journal in which we advertised. This paper has a circulation of about 2,000 copies and is distributed every Friday free of charge in the immediate vicinity of our store.

We thought we had a fairly good ad., but got absolutely no results. Is it the fault of the ad., or do you think if we had tried to reach the public through a different medium we would have succeeded better? We would be pleased to have you outline a plan for systematic advertising for 1916. We handle a complete line of everything usually found in a first-class grocery store. We would be willing to spend from 1 to 1½ per cent. of $18,000 per year.

We are having next-door competition of four large chain stores. We are giving free delivery, but do not believe in price cutting. Can you offer any suggestions to impress the free delivery on the customer's mind?

We have been reading your department religiously and have tried to profit by the mistakes of others. The idea of running the ad. across the sheet was obtained from a recent criticism in your department.

Thanking you in advance, we remain,

Yours truly,
H. A. DIMLICH.

Before I take up Mr. Dimlich's advertising I want to say something about his envelope. He is using first-class stationery, meaning his letterhead. It is well printed on fine paper. But his envelope is an advertising affair supplied him by a salt company, in the manner familiar to all the readers hereof. The advertisement of the manufacturer who gives it away occupies most of the space, and the only thing which the retailer gets is his name and address in small type. In other words, the retailer sells to the manufacturer the chief advertising space on a thousand of his envelopes for a sum which would hardly be more than $1.50 or $2! And of course he does more—he gives away a part of his own dignity. I don't believe if I were a retailer, I should ever use anybody's stationery but my own. It cheapens any store that does it, just as it would do if a grocer should wear some manufacturer's advertisement on the back of his coat.

The paper which Mr. Dimlich sends is "The Green Ridge Review," a little four-page affair printed on fair paper but containing mostly plate matter. It has a little local news on the first page, but none anywhere else. There are a few local advertisements in it, among them Mr. Dimlich's. It occupies about a third of the back page, and is here reproduced, reduced in size:—

with new tires throughout, and my wife is going to buy it a new windshield. —Chicago Herald. What He'd Done. "I've come to see if you can lend me $5." "That so? Which way did you come?" "Down Griswold street." "Oh, you did, eh? Did it occur to you that you had walked right by one of nine banks that are in the business of lending money to get to me?" —Detroit Free Press. An Easy One What is that which nobody wants and nobody likes to lose? A lawsuit.		its bank, admittance, never, no, no, no, was named by Fremont in honor of Baron Humboldt. Bell Phone 4060 All work called for and delivered.

DIMLICH'S	Electric St.	Sanderson Av.	DIMLICH'S

In my judgment there may be several reasons why this advertising doesn't pull. The first is undoubtedly the paper. Very few people pay any attention to a paper circulated free. "What is not worth paying for is not worth reading." There are some exceptions to this rule. The Philadelphia chain stores, for example, use so-called newspapers which are much like the "Green Ridge Review," and they are circulated free and undoubtedly bring results. But the reason is clear: the chain stores have educated the public to expect wonderful bargains from them, and people will therefore read their advertising no matter what form it comes in. I assume that this is not at all true with Mr. Dimlich's store.

Another thing to say about this paper is that there is nothing particular in it to compel anybody's attention outside of the scant two columns of local news on the first page. Had Mr. Dimlich's advertisement appeared there it would have stood a better chance; it had, I think, a very poor position. The manager of this paper should brighten it up. He should put more local news and original matter in it.

Another reason why the advertising didn't pay I believe to be the advertising itself. There is nothing much to it. In several cases no prices are given, and in some cases what is said is simply the conventional statements which could and probably do come out of any grocery store. In a word, this advertisement neither quotes any particularly attractive prices, nor sets forth quality in such a way as to attract customers from that standpoint. Therefore, if I am right in this, it falls down in both of the two vital respects which makes advertising good or bad.

If I were Mr. Dimlich, I should issue a store paper of my own and place it systematically in the hands of a selected list. If within the appropriation, I should augment this by advertising in the regular local papers, if there are any good ones that circulate in that particular territory. The free delivery can be played up in any advertising done, but my experience is that free delivery does not compete with cut prices, except with a small percentage of the people.

NOTE.—This department is devoted to the criticism of advertising matter sent in, to the devising of new advertising ideas for special occasions, upon request, and to the suggesting of original advertisements when data is supplied. All communications sent for this Department should be addressed to the Editor of Science of Advertising. They will be taken up in strict rotation.

One of the Best Sellers

From Portland, Maine, to Portland, Oregon,

Fleischmann's Yeast

will be found on sale at the "grocer's."

It's the same yeast cake with its tin foil and yellow label—the same regular deliveries and dependable service.

Fleischmann's Yeast is one of America's "Best Sellers."

THE VALUE OF BRIGHT STORES

The difficulty of making a sale—whether it be dry goods or vegetables, jewelry or shoes is increased tenfold in a poorly lighted store. Other things being equal, the Electrically lighted shop will do more business than the store which uses other illuminants. "Indoor Daylight" can only be obtained by the use of Mazda Electric lamps.

FEELS' SOAP IS THE ONLY NAPHTHA SOAP

BURKS LARD IS THE FINEST EVER MADE

Increase your trade with Lipton's Tea—

Millions of housewives know from experience that tea in bulk never twice tastes alike; that the blend varies; that it absorbs moisture, foreign flavors and strange odors that happen to be near.

They will drink more tea when you teach them that the sealed air-tight package protects all the original flavor and strength, all the natural aroma of Lipton's Tea; that the blend of Lipton's Tea is delicious and uniform; that the leaf comes to them pure, clean and fragrant as when it left the Lipton Tea Gardens of the Far East.

LIPTON'S TEA

tea—
that's only half a word—the other half is LIPTON'S

They will buy more tea—Lipton's Tea—when you teach them that their particular tea taste is best met in Lipton's Tea because there are eleven delicious blends from which to choose—and that the second package they buy will taste just the same as the first.

Perhaps you have not given the thought it deserved to the good sense and the profit sense of selling package tea—Lipton's Tea—rather than tea in bulk. The package way of selling tea is the economical way. You waste no time in weighing, nor do you spill any about the counter. You throw in no extra pinches for generous good measure. There is no tea to spoil in an open bin. Lipton's packages are in handy sizes, pleasing to the customer—so are the prices.

Incidentally, our leadership as the largest tea growers in the world—on our own vast tea estates—has enabled us to maintain the same low price of Lipton's Tea, both to the dealer and consumer, though other teas in package and bulk have gone up in price. Lipton's quality is of the same high standard, of course: Here is another reason for your selling Lipton's Tea in the sealed, airtight packages.
